WAS SPENT QUIETLY

Thanksgiving Day and Hallowe'en Celebrated by Peterborough Citizens--Little Damage Done Last Night

WERE NO ARRESTS

Thanksgiving was very quietly and enjoyably spent by Peterborough citizens yesterday. The weather conditions were ideal. Bright and sunshiny, with a summer-like warmth in the air, the weather naturally appealed to everyone to get out of doors. The Examiner road race in the morning were witnessed by an enormous crowd, and the other sporting events of the day, the rugby match in the afternoon at Riverside Park between the Collegiate Institute of Peterborough, and the Jarvis street team of Toronto was largely attended. The Crystal, Princess and Royal theatres and the Grand Opera House were crowded during the afternoon and evening.

In the morning a special children's service was held in the George street Methodist church, and there was a very large gathering of children.

Last night was an unusual coincidence, as it was Hallowe'en as well as Thanksgiving. There was not a great deal of mischief done, at least nothing serious has been reported to the police, and there were no arrests. A very large number of youngsters paraded the streets in false faces and fantastic garb, and many harmless pranks were indulged in. Gates were taken off their hinges, steps removed and verandah furniture left out found a spot on the sidewalk. The most serious disturbance were the tearing down of fences. On George street north some one cut the awning ropes of every second store along the line, and Hedgeford's bread delivery waggons were run out of their shed by a band of adventurous youths.

WHAT THEY HAVE DONE

Something About the First Four Men in the Examiner Road Races Yesterday—Two Double Winners

THORPE THRICE SECOND

Albert Smoke, the winner of the Examiner Senior race last year is the most promising runner tha thas ever competed in the event and it looked after should make a name for himself. His performance in stepping 10 miles in close on to 55 minutes on a heavy road is a remarkable one. Smoke, who is only twenty years of age, won the Examiner Senior race last year. Before that time he was not greatly fancied. He appeared first in the running game in Lindsay in a 10 mile race on Labour Day, 1908, behind Tom Longboat, Percy Sellen, and George Black, of Toronto, Fred Simpson of Hiawatha and Charlie Thorpe of Peterborough.

Charlie Thorpe, the second man, is a veteran of the Examiner Senior Race, having been a contestant in the past four year. He was fifth in 1907 the year that Ernie Wilson made his record, which lasted until yesterday. In 1908 he ran second behind J. H. Adams., in 1909, he was once again second, following Smoke home and yesterday he once more had to succumb to the Indian's speed, making Thorpe's record, three second prizes in three successive races.

Geo. Robinson, the little English runner connected with the Otonabee A.C., is another well known figure in the Examiner Race. In 1908, he was fifth behind J. H. Adams, Chas. Thorpe, Ernie Wilson and Hanlon Howard. Last year he moved up one place and was fourth, being beaten out of third place by Geo. Brown. Yesterday he succeeded in getting one place closer to the front.

Ernest Coons, of Young's Point, the fourth man yesterday made his debut in the Examiner road-race yesterday. Although new at the running game he is a well known soccer player, having played with the Bridgenorth and Lakefield Midland League teams. He ran a good race yesterday, despite the fact that he has had little training. He will be back again after the Trophy next year.

Willie Edwards, the junior winner, won the junior event last year and repeated yesterday. His home is in Keene and his only running outside of the Examiner races has been at fall fairs. At Norwood this year he was second to W. Willis of the Y.M.C.A. in a three mile race.

Frank Leahy, the second man who ran a splendid race yesterday is a Douro boy. This was his second appearance in the Examiner junior race. Last year he was ninth so that he has jumped up seven places.

Little is known here of Holnbeck, of Cobourg, who was third yesterday. He was the biggest boy in the race and gave Edwards a hard battle in the early stages.

Cecil Armstrong the fourth man to finish is a member of the Knox Church Boys' Club and his performance yesterday was most creditable. The youngster is over fourteen years old and much smaller than the three who preceded him.

Burned to Death.

CORNWALL, ONT., NOV. 1.—The seven year old son of Richard Justice, a farmer of Winchester, was burned to death, when barns were destroyed yesterday morning by fire, due to an unknown cause. The child was not missed until the fire was well on. The entire season's crop, prize pigs and horses and other stock, valued at eight thousand, was also destroyed.

Burglars Surprised.

BELLEVILLE, ONT., NOV. 1.—Bargman's jewelry store was entered at midnight and gold and silver gems and other valuables to the amount of $550, were taken. The booty was found in a sack in the alleyway.

Growing Warm.

VICTORIAVILLE, Q., NOV. 1.—The election campaign in Arthabaska is growing more bitter every hour. The Nationalists speakers are especially belligerent. One said in a meeting last night, "We owe nothing to England; the only privileges we enjoy were torn from her by force. England did not conquer Canada for love, she did not plant the cross as France did, but established counting houses to make money.

MONTREAL, NOV. 1.—Fireman Rochon was badly burned and Caretaker A. Gauthier had a narrow escape when the old wooden Federal hockey stadium was destroyed by fire this morning.

DISGUSTED WITH TREATMENT GIVEN GRAHAME WHITE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., NOV. 1.—Alleging that they changed rules without notice, purposely to debar Grahame White, the Englishman, from winning the Statue of Liberty flying contest and give it to Moissant, a United States er, Armstrong Drexell, the millionaire fancier has resigned from the Aero Club of America in disgust. All the aviators at the meet are protesting against the club's treatment of Grahame-White.

PROTEST AGAINST TWO OF JUNIOR PRIZE WINNERS

Yesterday's junior race was run under protest, some of the runners complaining that Willie Edwards of Keene, the ultimate winner, and G. Holnbeck of Cobourg, who finished third, were not eligible under the age clause. Both boys maintained that they were under eighteen. Before the prizes will be awarded, however, they will be compelled to prove their statements by producing certificates of birth registration. If they fail to do this they will be disqualified and the prizes will be awarded accordingly, Frank Leahy being given first, Cecil Armstrong second, J. B. Mann third, and Nagie Phelan fourth.

FELL FROM LOG AND FRACTURED HIS HIP

Mr. Wm. M. Jones, an employee of the Canadian General Electric Company who lives at 299 Pear avenue, was the victim of a painful accident yesterday. While out shooting with a companion he slipped in walking along a log and fell heavily, fracturing his hip bone. His friend went for assistance and Mr. Jones was brought to the city, where his injuries were attended to by Dr. McCullough.

Need For More Platform Accommodation At Station

Over a thousand passengers left Toronto on Saturday evening on the C.P.R. local for points east and it is estimated that between six and seven hundred of these were for Peterborough. There is an excellent opportunity for the Board of Trade or the City Council to take the matter up with the C.P.R. authorities and see if more platform accommodation cannot be provided for the convenience of the travelling public as well as of Peterborough citizens. Almost any evening the platform is nearly impassable owing to the rush and crush of people meeting friends and of passengers going east from here.

This is a matter that the public are interested in and some movement should be made to improve conditions. There is plenty of room north of the present platform and west of the station building to give the accommodation required.

A Tribute To Memory Of Late James Stevenson

On Sunday Rev. Canon Davidson made a reference as a matter of public interest to the death of Mr. Jas. Stevenson. He said that many citizens present were unaware how large a factor Mr. Stevenson had been in the upbuilding of Peterborough and of his long influence and many benefactions. The latter continued even in his declining years and were exemplified in his personal work at Central Park. Mr. Stevenson had worked for the people at large and had served in many public offices. Canon Davidson hoped that the spirit of public service personified by Mr. Stevenson would be caught by the younger citizens.

THE FEET IN PRISON

Tightly imprisoned in the modern shoe the feet perspire and the skin is chafed and irritated until it is in anything but a healthy condition. Corns and bunions are formed and walking becomes torture. Possibly you never thought of Dr. Chase's Ointment in this connection but it brings wonderful relief and comfort almost instantly. Its soothing, healing effects are magical.

Congregation of the Charlotte St. Methodist Church Are Decidedly Averse From Moving From Where They Are

RESULT OF THE VOTE

The public are always interested in the erection of a new church or in the remodelling of an old one. The Charlotte Street Methodist congregation it is well known, has outgrown the present accommodation. Consequently the Board of the Church and the pastor have been looking to see what can be done to bring about better conditions.

It will be remembered by Examiner readers that it was decided to take a vote among the congregation as to the best method. The generous offer made by Hon. Senator Cox was voted upon.

The vote stood as follows:

Offer No. 1. Of building a new church on the present site, or reconstructing the present building 173 votes.

Offer No. 2 Of building on the Aaron Cox site 5 votes.

Offer No. 3 Of building on the A. J. Davis site 62 votes.

The Board will hold a meeting in the near future to go into the matter.

THE REAL REASONS.

A correspondent of the Globe quotes the enterprising and going-ahead town of Welland as a product of the "National Policy." "In 1870," it is said, "manufactures sprung up there and the town began to grow." This is certainly an exaggerated and misleading statement. Any one who knows Welland knows that it is not a correct claim. The "N. P." came into force in 1879, thirty years ago. It had no effect on the growth or prosperity of Welland. The town went stolidly moribund, was stationary, or even receding, till within five or six years ago. What galvanized Welland into the vigorous life it is now leading was the obtaining of Niagara power and the application of natural gas to manufacturing purpose. With gas at 25 cents per thousand and with power at $12 per horse-power, and even at $11—as is now actually paid for large lots—the conditions for successful manufacturing were unsurpassed anywhere. In conjunction with these were the transportation facilities possessed by the town; first and greatest, the great Welland Canal, which passes through the town, and, secondly, seven or eight railway lines. With all these advantages, there came a sudden realization of them, by the citizens, and an energetic campaign conducted, has resulted in the past few years in a manufacturing and commercial growth in the case of the town of Welland, unique in Canadian experience. Five or six years ago the town which had slumbered through twenty-five years of the "National Policy" began to come into its own; because its citizens awoke to the possibilities comprised in the cheapest fuel and the cheapest power in the world, and in unsurpassed transportation facilities, and began to reap the harvest that was ready to the hands of its people. Niagara Falls power did not owe its origin to a Dominion fiscal policy, but to the policy of the Ross Government, which encouraged its development; and private enterprise procured the transmission of the industrial Aladdin's lamp to Welland. The canny Wellanders have been rubbing it to some purpose; for they seem to be able to get almost anything in the way of industrial establishments they desire.

DOING IS WHAT COUNTS.

An article by "Maria" of the Globe staff, sent from Ottawa, puts in a rather strong light one of two things. It illustrates the superior mental equipment of women or girls over men and boys, or in default of this superiority, it shows superior compensating qualities possessed by the gentler sex. Maria points out that competitive examinations by the Civil Service Commission have done more than abolish the patronage system. They have resulted in women heading the lists in all divisions in which they may compete, but what is more striking the lowest percentage of marks have, in some examinations, been considerably above the highest obtained by the men." The cause of all this is not far to seek. It is not because the girls and women have more brains; but they use them to better advantage. They show more application and are less distracted from study by sports and amusements. Girls are more conscientious; they have a higher sense of duty. As a rule a girl at school or college, is fair to her parents; she makes the most of her opportunities; she aims to see that, so far as she is concerned, full value shall be received for the expenditure—very often a family sacrifice—devoted to her education. As a rule her nights are spent in study, and not in the roystering that many male students mistakenly seem to consider a mark of manhood. Then, again, the traditional contempt felt and expressed for female mentality leads many boys and men to consider that it is not necessary to make any great attempt to overcome, or equal, girls, in competitive study; they thus repeat the lesson of the fable of the fox and the tortoise in the race. They sleep and idle, in other words, they waste their time in sporting, games, dissipation, while the girl tortoise is steadily forging ahead and in the end will have her subject mastered, she faces the examinations armed for the fray from head to foot. While brains are a factor in success, the use of them is a far more important and undispensible factor. It is not the most clever boy or girl that gets at the head of the class. A comparatively stupid boy or girl, with reasonable and steady application, makes the best student. It is not the cleverest boy or girl by natural ability, that wins the honours. Any boy or girl in a class, if he or she, studies regularly a reasonable amount of time every day, would be able to "smash" any examination paper. The ability to do things is not the greatest endowment; the will to do things and the doing of them are what count.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

About all of the direct advocacy of reciprocity is coming from our friends in the United States. If our Yankee cousins want to "dicker" so badly, they must expect the treatment of the anxious purchaser. The more he shows that he wants an article the stiffer is likely to be the giver. Canada is by no means sitting up o' nights over the matter of reciprocity. It will have to be a pretty good article of its kind and the price pretty low before Canada closes a deal.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, says the Toronto Star, has now been Prime Minister of Canada for a longer unbroken period than any other man, namely, for fourteen years and more than three months. Sir John Macdonald's longest unbroken term was from October, 1878, to June, 1891. But Sir John was also Prime Minister from July, 1867, to November, 1873, making his total for confederated Canada about twenty years, besides his service in old Canada.

CENSUS PADDING.

(Monetary Times)

Apparently impressed by the fact so tersely expressed by their countryman that while figures cannot lie, liars can figure, The Washington authorities have taken a new census for a number of Western cities. The statistical bump of certain enthusiasts, coupled with the erring pencils of census commissioners, has resulted in the exhibit of population growth, which neither science nor human nature can justify. Cities specially mentioned as being affected by the frauds are Tacoma, Seattle and Aberdeen, Wash.; Portland, Ore.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Boise, Idaho, and Fort Smith, Ark., but it is said that there are many others. The result of a second enumeration of Tacoma shows a population of 82,972, an increase of 45,258, or 120 per cent. over the population of 1900. The first figures sent in were 116,248. In other words, the actual population was padded to the extent of 32,296, which would have meant a further addition of 40 per cent. This should act as a reminder that during the taking of the Dominion census next year, Canada much prefers to have figures which are facts.

FRANCE AND CANADA.

(Monetary Times and Trade Review)

France is rapidly assuming more important relations with the Dominion. The news that securities to the value of 3,000,000 francs of the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway will be placed in Paris is a further evidence of the growing favour of our stocks and bonds in the over-seas republic. We have drawn capital from France for manufacturing, industrial and other development and in loans on mortgages altogether to the extent of at least $50,000,000. Senator Roy, of Edmonton, whom, it is understood has been named by the Dominion Government as Canadian Commissioner to France, has interested considerable French capital in Canada, and hopes, through the medium of a mortgage company with which he is connected, to bring here within a comparatively short time about $20,000,000 of French capital. A cablegram was received last week from Mr. Rodolphe Forget announcing that the stock of the Quebec Railway, Light, Heat and Power Company has been unanimously accepted by the committee of the Paris Bourse for quotation "for account," the quotation hitherto having been "for cash." As on the London, so on the Paris market—there are two classes of trading, one for cash and the other for account. In the former case the stock has to be paid for on the same day it is purchased, and in the latter the settlement is twice a month. During the coming year it is likely that French investors will be come largely interested in Canadian securities. In this connection it is interesting to ote, too, the report of the Canadian Trade Commissioner at Paris regarding the present wheat shortage in France and the opportunity it affords Canadian wheat.

Mr. Butler's Estimate Of The Route Of The Hudson Bay Railway

(Winnipeg Free Press)

As Mr. Butler, the former Deputy Minister of Railways, and Chief Engineer of the Department, points out in his report in the annual blue-book of Department of Railways and Canals, the territory that will be tributary to the Hudson Bay Railway—that is to say, the territory west of a line drawn from Dauphin through Weyburn—is equal in area to the States of North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nebraska, and Iowa, where there is a population of ten millions, with some 50,000 miles of railway. Mr. Butler's assumption that, square mile for square mile, the the first-mentioned area is at least equal in fertility to the States named is surely a safe one.

His estimates of prospective traffic do not err on the side of being too small. That the problem of operating the route so as to make it of the greatest advantage to the West is a problem that presents some difficulties is evident; but the difficulties are by no means insuperable. Open the route is open these matters will find their own adjustment. Mr. Butler's figures, showing that a large traffic in Nova Scotia coal could be developed, indicate the certain prospect there is of freight to be carried on the return trips from the Bay.

As to the terminal on the Bay, the weight of lay, non-engineering opinion has favoured Churchill, while engineering opinion is decidely in favour of Nelson. Non-engineering opinion has hee against Nelson on account of the shoals that make it necessary for vessels to anchor some fifteen miles out. But the engineers do not regard those shoals as being at all a decisive factor in the situation. The tremendous volume of water in the Nelson River makes it plain that there must be a main channel among the shoals, which when it is once deepened will be kept deep by the force of the great outflow. Buoyed and lighted it will afford completely safe access to the port. It may be taken for granted that Nelson will be the terminal. Apart from the harbour itself, the route to Nelson will have the advantage of a shorter haul, better grades, and better land for settlement along the line.

The immense value of the service that the Hudson Bay route will render to Western Canada provided the line of railway to the Bay is built by the Government of Canada and made a first-class one in every respect, to be the property of the people of Canada in perpetuity, with its operation and the control of its rates directly under the control of the Government, becomes more and more evident with every authoritative report in regard to the possibilities of the route. Mr. Butler is a man who stands second to none as a transportation authority. His report makes it plain that the Hudson Bay route will mean a saving of 5 cents a bushel on the wheat going out by that outlet. The interests of the West demand that the incalculable usefulness of this outlet shall not be limited by its being given over to the control of corporation interests.

CONSUMPTIVE SYMPTOMS
Removed by Vinol—A Genuine Case Reported from Newark, O.

Newark, O.—"About two years ago my wife was in very poor health. For three months she suffered from a bad cough which had settled on her lungs she was run down, reduced in flesh and had all the symptoms of consumption. She began taking Vinol, and before the first bottle was gone she was improved in health before she had finished her third bottle, her cough was gone and she was well.

"We cannot say too much in praise of Vinol. N. L. Stebleton." (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

In pulmonary troubles Vinol shows its power for good. It goes to the seat of the trouble, heals the inflamed surfaces and cures the cause of the cough.

In hundreds of cases where cod liver oil and emulsions have failed, Vinol has succeeded because it contains all the curative value they do, but its good work is not retarded by useless grease and oil.

LARGEST STEAMER IN THE WORLD

Launch of the White Star Line's Triple-Screw S. S. "Olympic" at Belfast, Ireland

BELFAST, October 20th.—The White Star Line's giant steamer Olympic was launched successfully to-day. Fifty thousand spectators watched the monster hull glide swiftly down the ways, the Countess of Aberdeen, wife of the Viceroy of Ireland, christened the ship. The Olympic is the largest steamer now afloat.

The White Star Line's triple-screw steamer Olympic exceeds by nearly 100 feet in length and 13,000 tons any other ship afloat. Her principal dimensions are:

	Feet
Length over all	882½
Breadth over all	92½
Breadth over boat deck	94
Height from bottom of keel to boat deck	97
Height from bottom of keel to top of Captain's house	105½
Height of funnels above casing	72
Height of funnels above boat deck	81½
Distance from top of funnel to keel	175
Number of steel decks	11
Number of watertight bulkheads	15

The gigantic measurements of this vessel are best appreciated when it is known that in length the "Olympic" overtops the height of the Metropolitan Tower in New York by 182 feet, is twice as long as the height of the dome of St. Peter's at Rome, and equals in length the total drop of the famous Bridal Veil Fall in the Yosemite Valley. Indeed, if the "Olympic" and her sister-vessel Titantic soon to be launched were placed end to end under the Brooklyn Bridge, they would completely block the East River, and extend over the shore one hundred feet on each side. It is also interesting to note that the length of each of these ships is four times the height of Bunker Hill monument.

In each ship three million steel rivets, weighing in all 1,200 tons, have been employed to bind the massive steel plates, insuring the greatest stability, and the rudder of one vessel weighs 100 tons, yet will be moved by electricity almost as lightly as a feather.

These monsters of the deep will each accommodate 2,500 passengers, carrying a crew of 860, and because of the enormous size of the ships, the accommodations, both as regards the several public apartments and the passenger staterooms, will be exceptionally spacious, while the beauty and luxury of the appointments will surpass anything hitherto attempted. Special attractions, such as Turkish and electric bath establishments, swimming pools, tennis courts, sun parlours, sports decks and palm courts, will be provided in addition to restaurants, dining saloons, lounges, smoking-apartments, elevators, etc., all of which will add much to the pleasure of a voyage on these marvels of marine achievement.

The "Olympic" and "Titantic" will be propelled by a unique combination of reciprocating engines with a low pressure turbine, such as the White Star line has employed so successfully on its Canadian Service steamer "Laurentic." By this ingenious system vibration is eliminated and mal-de-mer conquered. A speed of 22 knots per hour will be maintained.

Since the advent of the Great Eastern in 1858 no steamer has created such general interest as the "Olympic," not only on account of her surpassing size, but also because of the immense forward steps thus marked in other lines of marine accomplishment, the outcome of many centuries of conflict with the sea.

The Olympic will join the White Star Line's mail service between New York, Plymouth, Cherbourg and Southampton next summer, followed by the Titantic in the early fall.

SHOW A DECREASE

The vital statistics compiled at the City Clerk's office for the month of October, show a decrease in all three departments, as compared with the same month last year. Cupid had better get his arrows repointed, as the figures indicate that his aim this year has been only half as accurate as for October, last year. In October, 1909, there was an average of a marriage per day throughout; this year the total for the month was but fifteen. Following are the figures:

	Oct. 1910	Oct. 1909
Births	25	31
Deaths	15	31
Marriages	20	26

LOCAL COLLEGIANS WERE BEATEN BY TORONTO TEAM

Jarvis St. Collegiate Fourteen Won an Interesting Game at Riverside Park Yesterday Afternoon by 19 Points to 6---Visitors Have a Speedy, Well Balanced Team and Won a Decisive Victory.

Up against a heavier and faster team, the Peterborough Collegiate fourteen went down before the Jarvis street Collegiate of Toronto in an interesting and well played game of rugby at Riverside Park yesterday afternoon by a score of 19 to 6. Although outplayed and outscored, the local students made a good showing against an aggregation which holds the Toronto Collegiate championship and has been termed the fastest junior outfit in the province. Jarvis led all the way, being in front 4 to 0 at the end of the first quarter, 13-6 at half time and 19-6 at three quarters. Peterborough finished strong and had an equal share of the battle in the last half, scoring a kick to the dead line and an unconverted rouge, while Jarvis had a try and a rouge.

400 people saw the game, which was played under ideal weather conditions. It was bright and warm, a little too much so for the players, but the spectators had nothing to complain about. The ground was a little too soft, but in remarkably good shape, considering the snow and rain at the end of the last week. The game abounded in plenty of long runs, good kicking and fine tackling and the crowd enjoyed every moment of the struggle.

The Toronto Collegians have a heavy, fast and well-trained aggregation, a credit to their coach, Mr. Munro, who refereed. Their backs were all sure catches, every kick being handled perfectly, while the rear guard showed fine speed and dodging ability, running the ball back for substantial gains on many occasions. The wings protected their backs splendidly and tackled well. The visitors played the long passing game to perfection and it proved a great ground gainer for them. The play with Davidson's accurate and well-placed punting practically won the game for the Toronto fourteen.

Peterborough were outweighed, but in spite of the handicap held their own in the mass plays. If anything they had a little advantage in this department. It was in the open play that they failed to show the speed behind the line that was such a prominent feature of the Jarvis' street team's work. However, the granite and gray gave a good account of themselves against a splendid team and have no reason to be ashamed of their defeat as the visitors have an unbroken list of victories to their credit.

All the visitors' back division were in the limelight. Davidson by his splendid punting and the others from their accurate catching and their speed when carrying the ball. Dopp was especially prominent on one occasion, tearing through a broken field for a sensational sixty yards dash. Quarter-back Mills played a magnificent game, the feature of his playing being his wonderfully accurate long passes. Time after time he shot the leather ball way across the field to his halves like a baseball and the result was generally a gain. The wings tackled well and gave Davidson ample opportunity to get his kicks away.

The Peterborough back division lacked the visitors speed, and with the exception of Gibson, failed to make much ground in running back kicks. They caught well, however, and had but one muff chalked up against them. Gibson made some nice dodging runs while Hogan hit the lines for good gains. The stars of the team, however, on the day's play were Matthews and Gilbert. The former worked in two pretty thirty yard runs and tackled beautifully, while Gilbert played a magnificent game. He seemed to leak through the visitors' line at will and spoiled a score of plays by hurling back the man with the ball. He was always on the ball and never let up for a minute. Conroy and Eastwood both did some nice tackling.

The officials, Mr. J. R. Munro of Toronto, referee, and Mr. Ferguson of local Collegiate, umpire, were smart and impartial. The teams were:

Peterborough C. I.—Back Hayes, right half Gibson, centre half Minorgan, left half Hogan, quarter Matthews (capt.), scrimmage Leahy, Hill, Harstone, inside wings Eastwood, McCabe (Laine), middle wings Fee, Throop, outside wings Gilbert, Conroy.

Hayes kicked off for Peterborough, but almost at once play was carried into the local's territory. Davidson kicked to Minorgan. Peterborough kicked twice for small gains and then Minorgan kicked into the scrimmage and it was Jarvis' ball at Peterborough's forty yard line. The visitors backed for a gain and then Davidson booted the ball over the dead line for the first point. 1-.

Jarvis street continued to press. Small took a beautifully placed thirty yard pass from Mills and nearly got over a nice run. He was downed magnificently by Gibson ten yards out. The Toronto team failed to gain on a buck and then Davidson booted high over the line to Gibson, who made a good try to get out but was downed for a rouge. Score 2-0.

The play continued in Peterborough territory. Davidson returned Hayes' kick-off and in the next scrimmage the visitors stole the ball. Mills made a beautiful pass to Dopp who got away for a twenty-five yard run, only a brilliant tackle by Hayes saving a touch down. Davidson kicked into touch-in-goal for another point. Score 3-0.

Peterborough were offside in the kick-out and Jarvis secured possession at Peterborough's twenty-five yard line. Davidson immediately kicked over for a rouge. Score 4-0.

Just before quarter time Jarvis secured the ball on a fumble two yards from Peterborough's line. They failed to gain on a buck and quarter time was called.

Second Quarter.

Following the Inter-Collegiate rules they were given the ball at the other end of the field. Peterborough braced splendidly and held the visitors for downs making a fine stand on their own two yard line. Hogan was sent into the line twice on tandem bucks and gained five yards. Minorgan's kick was blocked but Peterborough recovered and on the first down Gibson tore around the visitors' right end for a pretty thirty yards run on a fake buck, saving the situation. Minorgan booted well down the field. Jarvis tried a long pass for no gain and then Davidson kicked to Hayes, who ran the ball back brilliantly for twenty yards. Davidson kicked over the dead line for a single. Score 5-0.

Davidson returned Hayes' kick-out for another point. Score 6-0.

Jarvis tore off a pretty criss-cross for a good gain and Davidson once more booted the leather into touch-in-goal for a point. Score 7-00.

Jarvis street scored a try after time was up in this quarter before Referee Munro could be notified. The time had expired just before it was put in play, but the timers could not catch the referee's attention. It was costly for Peterborough as Dopp made a sensational run for a try on a kick from Minorgan who botted the ball on the open side of the field. It was converted neatly and the half time scored was 13-0.

Third Quarter.

Jarvis continued to have the better of the play in the third quarter. Their long passes gained ground for them and their halves made big gains or runs. Early in the quarter Davidson kicked over to Hayes who had to rouge. Score 14-0.

A few moments later Davidson again booted to Hayes who fumbled behind his line and Jarvis secured a try which was not converted. Score 19-0.

Peterborough rallied at this stage. Matthews broke loose for a forty yard run around Jarvis' left end on a criss-cross. Hayes tried to drop a goal, but his effort was a failure. Leahy stole the ball in a scrimmage a moment afterwards and Minorgan kicked to the dead line for Peterborough's first point. Score 19-1

Peterborough kept up the good work. Matthews by a magnificent run, following a criss-cross, carried the ball to Jarvis' twenty-five yard line. He was tackled heavily and knocked out, but soon revived and went on playing. Peterborough lost possession on an off side. Mills tried a long pass, but it was fumbled and Gilbert securing the ball crawled over the line for a try. Hayes failed to convert. Score 19-6 Three quarter time.

Last Quarter.

Neither team scored in the final quarter, the play being decidedly even. Peterborough pressed in the first stages of the quarter gaining possession on Mills' long pass, which went forward. It looked like a score for Peterborough, but Dopp grabbed Minorgan's high punt and tore off the feature play of the day, carrying the ball sixty yards and dodging or knocking off half a dozen tackles. Hogan partially stopped him at centre, but he was free and had a clear field when Laing brought him down from behind with a neat tackle at Peterborough's forty yard line. It was the sensational run of the day and took the gimp out of the locals forcing them back on the defensive. The only feature of the remaining minutes of play was a nice thirty yards dodging run along the side line by Gibson. Time was called with the ball at centre. Final score, Jarvis 19, Peterborough 6.

INDIAN BREAKS WILSON'S RECORD EDWARDS WINS JUNIOR SECOND TIME

About the same time Smoke concluded that he had fooled with the crowd long enough, and he came along with a sprint and took the lead. Thorpe, Cole of the Y.M.C.A., and Geo. Robinson hooked on to him and tried to hold him but the Indian had too much speed. He drew steadily away from Thorpe and was at one stage a quarter of a mile in advance. Cole, who had hung on in second place for some time, cracked up at six miles with a strained leg and dropped out. Half way home Thorpe quickened his pace and cut down the Indian's lead, at the same time drawing away from Robinson, although the little fellow was ploughing along through the mud at a pretty lively gait. Thorpe began to overhaul Smoke and finally got to within thirty yards of him. The Indian thought that was close enough for comfort and letting out a link or two, drew steadily away from Thorpe. Running with an easy, fast lope, the Mississagua got over the ground with little effort and easily increased his lead. From then on it was a procession. Thorpe had nothing left to make another challenge with, although he easily held second place. Smoke had just passed London street when Thorpe came into sight at Smith street, and the Indian gained little more in the last stage. He sprinted from Brock street like a hundred yards man amid the wild cheering of the crowd to whom the win was most pleasing. Thorpe finished an easy second in fairly good shape. Geo. Robinson who was fourth last year, followed the leaders long enough to draw away from the rest of the field and he was over two blocks ahead of Ernie Coons, of Young's Point, who finished fourth. The liveliest battle of the day was for feature of the event was the time made by Smoke. His time for the first four miles was twenty-one minutes, which is remarkably good running, considering the heavy condition the roads. Smoke has an easy stride and jogs along with apparently little difficulty, and at the finish seemed fresh and as if he was good for a few more miles.

Willie Edwards, of Keene, winner of the Examiner Junior Race for the Second Time in Succession

Chas. Thorpe, second in The Examiner Senior Race for the past three years

At Lakefield a large crowd of villagers had gathered in front of the Lakeview House and witnessed the start. In fact all along the street the people were out, and even the farmers showed their interest by coming out and cheering the runners as they passed along. People from the city came out to meet them in automombiles and buggies and all along the way from Auburn to the Examiner Office there were immense throngs of people all anxious to get the first sight of the lead. From the Y.M.C.A. down there was a dense mob striving to see the finish, but the runners were given a clear track and were not hampered in any way.

The standing of the senior runners was as follows:

1. ALBERT SMOKE, Chemong.
2. CHARLES THORPE, Peterborough
3. GEORGE ROBINSON, Otonabee A. C.
4. ERNEST COONS, Young's Point.
5. J. E. Lean, Camborne, Ont.
6. Jimmy McMartin, Otonabee A. C.
7. Chas. Brimble, Peterborough.

The Junior Race.

The biggest field in the history of the junior race was marshalled at the starting point, a hundred yards north of the five mile post by Messrs. W. O'Brien, starter and timer, and Thos. McGeachie, the clerk of the course. There were all sizes and ages from the last stages of seventeen down and the giving out of numbers and arranging such a large field took some time. There was little doubt as to the result of the race from the start. Edwards, of Keene, last year's winner, had evidently determined to pull the cork of the rest of the contestants early in the game, as he started out at once to get a lead. Frank Leahy, of Douro, and Holnbeck, the big Cobourg man, followed him and the three ran through the mud and soon opened up a lead. Other runners tried to follow, but found the pace too hot and had to drop back. Little Cecil Armstrong, the smallest of the prize winners, kept plugging along behind and towards the finish he too drew away. When Nassau was reached, Edwards was well in the lead, followed by Leahy and Holnbeck. From this point on the Keene runner increased his lead, running strongly and well. Among the score and a half runners scattered along behind him, there were constant changes of place, but none of them gave the winner much opposition. He finished with a strong srint over three blocks ahead of Leahy. His time was 29 mins., only 30 seconds slower than last year, a splendid performance, considering the difference in the conditions. The next three were pretty well bunched but none of them had much left to make an exciting finish with. Leahy was ten yards in front of Holnbeck, with the Cobourg boy twenty-five yards in advance of Armstrong, the fourth man. J. B. Mann, of Bridgenorth, was fifth, ending up with a sprint that showed he had lots in reserve. His ignorance of the road prevented him from getting closer as he delayed going after the leaders too long. He did not realize until he struck the city limits that he was so close to the finish, and although he came fast from then on he was too far back. Nagle Phelan, of the T.A.S., was sixth, finishing with a strong sprint. Cecil Brown was seventh, Arthur Lipsett eighth, Frank Daley ninth, Tommy Barnett of the T.A.S. tenth, W. Foley of the same club eleventh, and Daniel Phelan of the T.A.S. twelfth. There was a great battle for the thirteenth position. Hutchison, of the Lindsay Y.M.C.A., was thirteenth at the Y.M.C., but slowed down to a walk and Max Rogers came along with a sprint passed him. The Lindsay boy started to run again and was challenged by little Willie Downer, who came up from behind with a sprint. Huchison had enough left to stall him off, however. Allan Knott, the little Chemong Indian, was in sixteenth place and evidently all in. The last man to finish was Charlie Ross of the A.A.S. who was in twenty-fifth place. The smallest boy across the line was little Alf. Williams who toddled home in twenty-fourth place and got a big reception for his gameness.

The list of those who finished follows:

1. WILLIE EDWARDS, Keene.
2. FRANK LEAHY, Douro.
3. G. HOLNBECK, Cobourg.
4. CECIL ARMSTRONG, Peterborough.
5. J. B. Mann, Bridgenorth.
6. Nagle Phelan, T.A.S. Athletic Club.
7. Cecil Brown, Peterborough.
8. Arthur Lipsett, Peterborough.
9. Frank Daley, Peterborough.
10. T. Barnett, T.A.S. Athletic Society.
11. Wm. Foley, Peterborough.
12. Daniel Phelan, T.A.S. Athletic Club.
13. Max Rogers, Peterborough.
14. C. Hutchinson, Lindsay Y.M.C.A.
15. Willie Downer, Peterborough.
16. Allan Knott, Chemong A.C.
17. Leroy Chambers, Peterborough.
18. Chas. Telford, Peterborough Y.M.C.A.
19. Hayward Rogers, Bverseville.
20. John Downer, Peterborough.
21. Henry Drummond, Peterborough.
22. Stan Anderson, Peterborough.
23. Frank Halpin, Peterborough.
24. Alf. Williams, Peterborough.
25. Charlie Ross, T.A.S. Athletic Club

SMITH AND WILLS WON AT DESERONTO

Two Y. M. C. A. Runners Each Won a Silver Cup—Smith Made a New Record in the Two Mile and Willis Captured the Five Mile Event.

MAD EASY VICTORY

Harold Smith and W. Willis of the Y.M.C.A. cleaned up their races in the Athletic Meet at Deseronto yesterday, which had been postponed from Labour Day. Smith won the two mile affair, setting up a new record for the track while Willis romped home an easy winner in the five mile race, each getting a handsome Silver Cup for his good work.

In the two mile event Smith won by seventy-five yards from McCreadie of Belleville with Willis of Peterborough third. Willis took the lead at the start and led for half a mile when Smith overhauled him and went away. McCreadie, the Belleville runner, hooked on and the two had a merry battle. Smith cut out a lively pace that pulled McCreadie's cork effectually and he cracked up in the last quarter. Smith setting up a seventy-five yard lead while McCreadie only had enough left to finish. Smith covered the distance in 10.15, the fastest two miles ever run on the Deseronto track. The going was very heavy and slippery at that.

The five mile race was only a light lunch for Willis, who won as he pleased in 28 min., 10 secs. He had little opposition from his field as he had too much speed for the others and obtained an early lead. Alexander of Belleville was second and Wallace of Belleville, third.

The Children's Thanksgiving service was held yesterday in George Street Methodist church at 10 a.m., every Sunday School in the city sending a goodly number of scholars and teachers. A very hearty service was held, the singing of the hymns being a distinct feature, accompanied by the George Street Orchestra and ably conducted by Mr. R. J. Devey of St. John's. The Rev. Canon Davidson, Dr. Langfeldt, Rev. Mr. Henderson, Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. H. J. Keith, Rev. C. H. Coon and Rev. Fee took part

INTERESTING EVENING

Dr. Everett G. Smith Will Speak at Murray Street Baptist Church

Dr. Everett G. Smith, a medical missionary, who has spent 17 years in India, will deliver the annual address at the Thankoffering meeting of the Ladies' Mission Circle of Murray street Baptist Church, to-night, at 8 o'clock.

Dr. Smith's subject will be "The Women of India."

On Sunday evening he spoke on the medical work, and greatly delighted his audience. The Doctor has with him his wife and two children, both of whom were born in India. Miss Evelyn Smith, who is 14 years of age, is a most gifted young lady, and informs us that she has seen in Peterborough, something she never saw in her life before—snow. She was charmed with the slight snow storm of Saturday and Sunday morning.

The meeting of this evening will be open to the public and a most pleasant and profitable hour is assured.

CHIEF HOWARD AT CONVENTION

TORONTO, NOV. 1.—At the meeting of the Provincial Association of Fire Chiefs in the City Hall yesterday it was intimated that at this afternoon's session a suggestion would be made that the Dominion Government should be asked to appoint a commission for the purpose of taking over the whole matter of fire protection from the municipalities and Councils.

The idea is that all the municipalities should be called upon to set aside a certain sum of money every year from the rates as they now do for school purposes. In this way it is thought that the very necessary matter of fire protection would be lifted out of its present dependence on the uncertain generosity of the various municipalities concerned. This matter will be introduced by Chief W. A. Howard, of Peterborough, Secretary.

Today papers will be read by Chiefs W. A. Howard of Peterborough, James Corbett of the Massey-Harris Co., Alex. Boreland, of Woodstock, A. B. Ten Eyck of Hamilton, and John Thompson of Toronto, and by a practical hydraulic engineer unnamed. The officers will also be elected today. Mr. A. B. Ten Eyck, President was in the chair yesterday.

RECEIPTS FOR OCTOBER

The receipts at the local custom house for the month of October show a big increase over the figures for the corresponding period last year, illustrating the fact that Peterborough's trade is growing fast. The total receipts for the month just closed were $36,619.43, while in October, 1909, they were $28,797.73, an increase of $7,821.70 in favour of this year.

The Tallest Judge.

Standing well over 6 feet, Mr. John Eldon Bankes, K.C., who has been appointed a judge of the British High Court in place of the late Mr. Justice Walton, will be the tallest member of the Bench. He is a splendid example of hereditary genius, for he is the great-grandson of the famous Lord Chancellor Eldon, and the grandson, on his mother's side, of Lord Chief Justice Jervis. Like Lord Alverstone, whose pupil he once was, Mr. Bankes distinguished himself as an athlete, and while at Oxford rowed in the 'Varsity boat in 1875 and 1876. Mr. Bankes is not only a great lawyer but also a deadly cross-examiner, and gallant little Wales—Mr. Bankes is a native of Flintshire is not unnaturally very proud of this distinguished son of the Principality.

Finance of Matrimony.

A Wiltshire squire, says the author of "The Parson's Pleasance," riding to the bench one morning met a farmer. "So, John, I hear you are going to be married again," he said. "Yes, sir; next Tuesday." "You have been married three times before, have you not?" "Yes, sir; this will be the forth." "And you always did pretty well for yourself, John. Your wives had always a bit of money, I think?" "Yes, sir, but what with bringing on 'em in and carrying on 'em out there ain't no profit."

Some people cannot see anything but 1912 in this great country.

Trouble In Philippines.

Washington, Nov. 1.—Eight Christians, one of them an American, and two Chinese, have been killed and much property belonging to foreigners has been destroyed by the rebellious Manobos tribesmen in the Philippines, according to a report from Brigadier-General Pershin to the War Department yesterday.

Labor troubles are believed by War Department officials to be responsible for the uprising among the Manobos. The latter are of the lowest type of Filipinos, it is said. They are indolent and resent any effort to compel them to work. It is presumed here that the outbreak has resulted from too vigorous measures to meet this condition taken by foreigners owning plantations.

Kills Herself and Children.

New York, Nov. 1.—After making a last plea to her husband to return, Mrs. Annie Davis of Brooklyn, committed suicide, and took with her to the grave her two children, Ellis, 5 years old, and Elsie, 3. All were found asphyxiated by gas.

For the last two years Mrs. Davis had supported the family by sewing.

Auto Ran Away Backwards.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 1.—W. C. Massey, a rancher, and his seven-year-old daughter, were killed near San Fernando, when the engine of the auto they occupied with three others, stopped dead near the top of a hill and the machine rushed backward and overturned. The others jumped and were uninured.

Mrs. Washington Recovering.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 1.—Mrs. Maude Smith Washington, colored, who was shot and apparently fatally wounded at Falls View on Wednesday, Oct. 19, was taken home from the hospital yesterday, well on the road to recovery. Luther Baker, whom she named as her assailant, will be tried here Friday, before Magistrate Prance. Public sympathy is strong in his favor.

Dropped Dead.

Listowel, Nov. 1.—A much respected citizen, Charles Gowings, and one of the early settlers of this section, dropped dead on the road yesterday morning, heart failure being the cause.

DISMISSED THE CASE

A blacklister was fined $10.00 and costs $12.60 in all at this morning's session of the Police Court. The offender works around a local horse stable, and when asked where he got his first drink, he stated that bottles were left in the stalls. "And I suppose you left some money in another stall," commented the Magistrate, but he denied that fact. He was drunk however from Thursday until Saturday, so according to law, the above fine had to be imposed.

The two young men who appeared in the Police Court on Monday morning 24th of October, on a charge of breaking into James Edgar's store, were let go. The charge was withdrawn because the Crown Attorney considered that enough evidence could not be produced to convict them.

Try This Home-Made Cough Remedy

Costs Little, But Does the Work Quickly, or Money Refunded.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guiaicol and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada, that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equalled.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl," the Big Broadway Musical Comedy Success coming to "The Grand" next Friday

"The Yankee Girl," with Blanche Ring as its merry and bright particular star and with the selfsame supporting company and production in which Miss Ring has recently completed a long run at the New York Square Theatre, is to be the attraction at the Grand Opera House on Friday night, November 4th. This will be Miss Ring's first appearance in Peterborough. Hey lay is the work of George V. Hobart and Silvio Hein, the former contributing an amusing and interesting book, and the latter pleasing musical score. The supporting company is headed by Harry Gilfoil, so long a feature of the Hoyt farces and more recently a popular headliner in vaudeville. Miss Ring has a group of new songs, all of which prove worthy successors to those old Ring classics, "The Belle of Avenue A," "Bedelia," "The Good Old Summer Time, "My Irish Molly O," or "Yip-i-Addy." The new songs include "Nora Malone," "Love Among the Roses," "The Top of the Morning," "Louisiana Elizabeth" and the always popular "Rings on My Fingers," the song of which Miss Ring was the original exponent. There is a large and beautiful chorus of more than usual dancing and singing ability. Seat sale open to-morrow (Wednesday) morning.

A CORRECTION

In the case of Foley vs. West which was heard before Chancellor Sir John Boyd at the Assizes last week, the Examiner stated the other evening in its issue that a verdict was returned in favor of the defendants and that the plaintiff had to pay all the costs of the action. While the jury returned a verdict for the defendants His Lordship did not give judgment until Saturday when he dismissed the action, but the plaintiff is not called upon to pay any costs as far as the defendants are concerned. The Examiner gladly makes this correction.

The regular monthly meeting of the mess has been postponed from to-night until Wednesday of next week. The sergeants are asked to attend in uniform.

DISTRIBUTE FLOWER SEEDS TO AGENTS

That a great railroad should take an interest in the flower bed as well as the pearl bed, is a new departure, yet not new, for it has passed the experimental stage and is now an assured fact. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has a floral department which dispenses freely to the Agents from the Atlantic to the Pacific flower seeds, bulbs, shrubs, etc., for the beautification of its stations. All who have travelled extensively have vivid recollections of the beautiful surroundings at some way-side station, not only in this country but also in Europe. To a traveller who sees nothing of a town, what an inspiration to see the name of the stopping place in a beautiful design. There is an instant desire to see more of the town. The Canadian Pacific is aggressive and progressive. The first transcontinental road to put ships on the Pacific now puts a floral belt across the continent.

Just now the annual distribution of bulbs is being made, the seeds, etc., being sent out in the Spring, and over half a million are being forwarded to the employees all along the road. After sixteen years' operation, the Company finds it has 1,500 gardens at its stations, and this is a result that is encouraging, not only to the management of the road, but to the lovers of flowers, who travel along its lines.

TEACHER'S NERVES

Teachers often have the reputation of being cross when the trouble is with the nerves rather than the disposition. Mr. A. Sutherland, Principal South Bar School, Sydney, N.S., writes: "I was nervous and worried, had indigestion and headache and other ills. Doctors failed me. You can depend on me to recommend Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food for I believe it has entirely cured me." Tired brains and feeble nerves are soon restored by this celebrated food cure.

Toronto Paper Asked To Retract Statements About Gorham Trial

Crown Attorney R. E. Wood and Chief Thompson Deny the Statements Credited to Them by the News in Regard to an Alleged Tampering With Witnesses--- Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon Explain.

The Toronto News last night contained an article to the effect that the Crown witnesses in the Gorham case had been tampered with and that an investigation was to be held. The article contained what were said to be interviews with Crown Attorney R. E. Wood and Chief of Police Thompson, Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon, the accused's counsel have written the News asking them to publish a letter of denial in a prominent place and enclosing copies of letters from the two gentlemen quoted, denying the statements the News credited to them. Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon explain that the only persons questioned by them in regard to the events which took place previous to the shooting were questioned in the presence of a third party. In no instance was a statement made to any witness, but they were never questioned as to what they had seen or heard. This was necessary in order to have a plan made of the scene of the shooting by a surveyor. The copies of the letters follow:

Dear Sirs, As you have drawn my attention to an article in The Evening News of 28th inst., and asked me for my version of what transpired, I have this to say, I did not tell the reporter that the Crown witnesses had been tampered with nor that I had instructed the police to hold an investigation. The reporter stated that an investigation had been directed, and my reply was that I had not heard of it.—Yours truly,

Honoured On Eve Of His Departure From The City

Presentation To Mr. M. Wilson

Mr. Melville Wilson, who has been connected with the local staff of the Bell Telephone Company leaves on Thursday morning for Winnipeg, where he has accepted a position with the Manitoba government's telephone system. He has been most popular and has many friends who will regret his departure.

On Saturday afternoon the office staff of the Bell Telephone Co. showed their esteem for Mr. Wilson by presenting him with a handsome case of pipes, and an address. The presentation was made by Mr. Thomas Sproat while the following address was read by Mr. Harry Soanes:

Dear Mel.,—Having learned with regret that you have decided to sever your connection with us, your fellow-workmen, to see your home and, perhaps your affinity, in the far West, we feel as if we could not let this opportunity pass without extending to you our congratulation on your advancement in telephone work. Hoping your future associations in old Fort Garry will be as pleasant as the bond of friendship which has existed between us, we ask you to accept these pipes, and trust in the wee sma' hours, when the circles ascend, your dreams will not only encircle the fair young lady, but may a few be a pleasant reminder of the old Peterborough staff.

Signed on behalf of the boys,
F. W. Doan,
F. S. Knapman,
Harry Soane,
Thos. Sproat,
A. A. Smith.

AN INSPIRING MESSAGE TO THE MEN OF THE CITY

Rev. Griffith Thomas Addressed a Very Large Congregation in All Saints' Church on Sunday Afternoon---A Forcible, Eloquent Speaker.

A large congregation of men gathered at All Saints' Church on Sunday afternoon at 4.15 to hear what proved to be a very interesting and instructive address by Dr. Griffith Thomas, late of Oxford University, Eng.

At the beginning of the service Mr. H. M. Gilchrist, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., spoke a few words regarding the Laymen's Missionary movement. He said that Jesus Christ had a vision here. It was a kingdom, the centre of which was to be love. But his mission was put away by his fellow men. They put him to a shameful death, but he rose from the grave and let us know. We know to-day the Gospel of Jesus Christ and respect it not. He went on to say that men are sticking up for the Laymen's Missionary movement more than they did. They congregate together and praise the missions and people wonder why. The reason is that God is working on the hearts of men. Men are working together for the evangelization of the world. Mr. Gilchrist said, also, that to-day thousands of men and women are coming into the Dominion, and if the people could realize this they would understand what he meant when he said that the people were growing more kind, and if something is not done toward the Christian work to make them Christian they will heathenize the people of this country. Men are beginning to realize that it is a heroic thing to take part in missionary work.

He also asked them if they had or were taking any part in the mission work. If they were doing their share. If they were doing what the world expected of them, and if they were not to begin at once.

Then Dr Griffith Thomas was introduced. He commenced by saying: "About eighty years ago some scientific men wrote that there was gold in Australia; they put up this argument but the people did not believe it. Some time later some of the ignorant uneducated men came with some yellow ore and in less than a week there was a great rush to Australia. It was shown that those ignorant men did what the scientific men could not do. This is evident that the greatest proof in the world is the proof of personal experience. The greatest soldier is not the one who stays at home during the war, and tells the other men how to do it.

"It is a fine thing for a man to have religion, even when it is taught to him by his parents in youth, but it is greater for him to get it by personal experience. There can be no arguments put up when there is personal experience. Yet, we have a perfect right to argue. If a man does not think out his position he is no use. The greatest thing in life is intellectual doing. 'Thy sins I forgive to thee,' said the Lord. No man has yet been able to give a definition of life. He can explain what it means, but cannot give a true definition of it. He does not know why what he eats sustains life. It is just the same with the Bible. A man once in speaking of the Bible, said that he treated the Bible like fish—he ate the fish and put the bones to one side; just the same with the Bible—he took the part that he could understand and left the rest. The simplest thing is personal experience. If a man would but trust the Lord Jesus Christ, it is simply marvellous what he will do for him. Personal experience is the surest and safest way of getting Christianity. Christianity is similar to a coin; men copy coins and if so the original thing must have been worth something; just the same with Christianity. Men profess to be Christians, so that is a sure sign that Christianity must be worth having.

The Lord Jesus Christ has never failed any one who trusted him. No man that ever trusted Christ and that does not trust him, can say or would say, that Christ has failed him. And you will find that personal experience will prove the fact.

In closing, the speaker said that personal experience is the only satisfying thing. You look at your past life and see that you have done wrong and how are you to get rid of your sins? How are you going to resist the evils and temptations? Jesus will help you, if you will trust him. He will give you power. You need power and that is the only way to get it. Trust God, that is the only way you can get real joy and happiness. And to trust God, look at your personal experience and that will teach you how. The Lord can overcome every difficulty. Come and trust the Lord. Blessed is the man who will trust in him.

Rev. Mr. Pogue, pastor of St. Paul's church, pronounced the benediction and the service came to an end.

RAILWAY LANDSCAPE GARDENING

In recent years many of the American railways have given a great amount of attention to the beautifying of the grounds surrounding their stations, freight sheds, etc. The Grand Trunk Railway System have not been behind in this good work, as is observed by an editorial in the October number of the "Railway Master Mechanic" published in Chicago.

"They say, 'If anyone doubts that landscape gardening has no place in railway repair shop operation, let him visit the 'gold plated' shops of the Grand Trunk at Battle Creek, Mich. While threading his way through the beds of geraniums, poppies, pansies and orchids which bedeck the grounds, the doubter, if he is a pessimist, will perhaps offer the opinion that probably gardening and not locomotive repairing is the specialty of the shops. Indeed, if the comparisons are capricious enough, one is inclined to wonder if there be not some connection between this devotion to the aesthetic and results as evidenced in quality and quantity of the output of repair shop work."

THE "INTERNATIONAL LIMITED"

One of the most artistic folders issued by the Grand Trunk is a brochure just out giving information regarding the International Limited," which is heralded as Canada's fastest train, as well as the finest. The booklet is prepared in most attractive style, well printed and illustrated, while the esthetic relation of type and illustrations is maintained to a notable degree. The story of the "International Limited" is a familiar one to Canadian, as well as American travellers, but as shown in the latest publication of the Company, it is still not merely interesting, but attractive. A full description of this train between Montreal and Chicago is given, together with all the information regarding time and accommodation, that any passenger could require, the whole tastefully put together and artistically illustrated. A copy may be had free on application to Grand Trunk City Office.

HARRY ADAMS

"The Workshop" Subject Of An Interesting Address At Goodfellowship Guild

Under the League of Good Fellowship a fair number of men attended the Princess Theatre Sunday afternoon, when the Rev. C. Carpenter gave an address on "The Workshop." He said that there was a tendency to look upon labour as a curse imposed by Almighty God. He argued that this was a mistake; that although labour might be said to have been imposed as a penalty, man was not cursed, for God is a God of love. No curse was inflicted, except upon Satan, in the form of a serpent. He pointed out that the object of work was beneficent, and that an idle life was wearisome, sameness and monotony, and that Adam, with nothing to do would have been in a desperate condition.

Work was given to make a man's thoughts pure and his life full; and happy is the man with a continual, congenial employment. The Saviour is rarely thought of as a "workman," yet there is little doubt, that from childhood to thirty years of age, He worked as a carpenter, as the laws of the Jews made it imperative that every child should have a trade, thus Christ took the tools and laboured thereby, showing that life was not made for idleness, but for honest toil.

Work makes for man's betterment, and helps to take him out of temptation. It is a dignified thing, and done well is acceptable in the sight of God.

The great Apostle Paul was a sailmaker, and partly supported himself by his trade, whilst spreading the Gospel.

He went on to speak of the contests between capital and labour of the present day, of the strikes and discontent, and gave it as his opinion that the great cause was that employers forgot that they were responsible beings, and treated men as machines or dumb-driven cattle. That workmen did not realize that they were part of a great cooperation, and, by both forgetting their mutual responsibilities. The employer should be thoughtful and helpful; that the employes should be considerate in acknowledging the employers risks, and each remembering that the other is a man and a brother. He urged his hearers to put the best of themselves into their work, and to keep every piece of work free from flaw, and their conscience free. A flaw or a bit of careless work may mean death and disaster to many. Work for the love of the work and not for the dollars, be provident, and make your loved ones secure in case of your removal from their midst; avoid evil company and vice, banish discontent and your work will be rewarded, if not here, in that Eternal World where all is equity.

TWO ALARMS

On Sunday afternoon the fire brigade received a call to Box 14. It proved to be only aproved to be only a chimney fire, at the residence of Mr. Ernest La Plante, 287 Wescott stret. It required a chemical, however, to extinguish it. No damage was done.

At 12 o'clock to-day another call was sent in by telephone from Minicola's, on Elmstreet. It proved to be also only a chimney blaze, and was extinguished by one chemical, without any damage incurring.

A GOOD CAPTURE

Messrs. W. D. Morris and J. D Thornton Land a Fifteen Pound Lunge

The fishing season is not at a [illegible] yet. This fact was evidenced yesterday afternoon when Messrs W. D. Morris and J. F. Thornton, both of this city, landed a 15-lb. lunge across from I. A. S. Park. The gentlemen were still fishing for bass, and the one who caught the lunge was using only a small gut hook. The big fish put up quite a fight and just when it was about three feet from the shore it bit the hook off, but it was grabbed and thrown on to the land by one of the men before it could get into deep water.

A BLOODY REVOLUTION IN SPAIN WAS PREVENTED BY QUICK WORK OF POLICE

Republicans Were Ready to Strike Blow at Midnight—Authorities Got Wind of Plan and Between 500 and 1000 of the Leaders Were Arrested.

A MASTERSTROKE

Special Wire to the Examiner.

MADRID, SPAIN, NOV 2.—By a master stroke of quick simultaneous action all over the country, the Government last night and this morning prevented what might have been the bloodiest revolution of modern times. This afternoon from five hundred to a thousand leading Radical Republicans are behind prison bars, awaiting trial for high treason. It seems that word had gone out from the revolutionary centre of Barcelonia to strike a blow at midnight. In practically every city and town in the kingdom the Republicans were to meet and take possession of all Royal and Government offices and buildings, but the authorities got wind of the plan and one hour before the appointed time the police swooped down and took the leaders into custody. It develops that the plans were complete for the overthrow of the Government and capture of King Alfonso. Arms and ammunition were stored everywhere.

GUN WAS ACCIDENTALLY DISCHARGED AND BOY IS BADLY INJURED

Clayton Selkirk Victim of a Painful Accident While Hunting Near Warsaw on Monday---Affair Happened in a Peculiar Manner.

Special to The Examiner:

WARSAW, NOV. 2.—A distressing accident occurred on the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day, to Master Clayton Selkirk, while out shooting near here. It appears that while crouching under some evergreens to get sight of a partridge which he believed to be hidden above, the gun, which was double-barreled, one barrel of which was unsafe, was discharged. The charge of one barrel went wide. In the recoil the gun left the boy's hands and, striking a rock, discharged the other, the contents entering the right limb, above the knee. Dr. Munro was summoned and removed the patient home, where the wound was dressed.

DOCTORS SCORE TRIUMPH OF MODERN SURGERY

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, NOV. 2.—When Norman Allen of Sutton, Ont., cut the main artery in his leg with a sharp chisel some weeks ago, he lost so much blood that the doctors despaired of his life. His younger brother volunteered and surgeons decided to try transfusion of blood, the first of such operations in Canada. At the General Hospital here blood was pumped out of one brother into another, and both have now recovered, and were presented to prominent surgeons of the United States and Canada to-day as marvels of the triumph of modern surgery.

Final Meeting Of The Cheese Board Was Largely Attended

11 3-16c. and 11 1-8c. paid This Morning—Annual Meeting Will be Held First Saturday in March

A RESOLUTION

The last meeting of the year of the Peterborough Cheese Board, was held this morning in the Bank of Montreal chambers, there being a large number of salesmen and buyers in attendance. There were 3,062 cheese boarded, and the prevailing prices were 11 3-16 cents, and 11 1-8 cents. The president of the Board, Mr. Switzer, was in the chair and before the bidding was started, Mr. F. E. Ellis, of the Farm and Dairy, addressed the Board on the question of installing cool curing plants in the factories. At present there are only four factories on the Peterborough Board who have cooling rooms and the number throughout the Province is not at all large. Mr. Ellis explained that the editors of Farmand Dairy intended taking up the matter of agitating for a bonus from the government, those factories who install the cool curing plant to receive it, the same as in the case of the creameries. While there was no distinction in the price of cool cured cheese and that which was not cool cured, he believed that eventually the cool cured cheese would bring a higher price. Several of the buyers spoke in favour of the installation of cool curing plants, and the owner of Central Smith factory, who has a cooling room, stated that it meant an annual saving of from three to four hundred dollars.

The Cheese Boarded.

The following factories boarded as follows:

Keene	130
Warminster	95
Shemler	90
Central Smith	155
Selwyn	130
Villiers	90
Warsaw	165
Westwood	135
Oakdale	130
Daisy D.	75
Lakefield	125
Pine Grove	75
King Edward	75
Maple Leaf	130
Myrtle	120
Ormonde	140
Young's Point	75
Fraserville	75
Indian River	115
North Dummer	80
East Emily	95
Trewern	100
Bensfort	80
Cedardale	80
Stony Lake	32
Cavanville	70
Norwood	130
Fleetwood	150
Killarney	100

The Buying.

The bidding was opened by Mr. Watkins at 11 1-16 cents, which was quickly raised to 11 1-8 cents by Mr G. A Gillespie. Mr Fitzgerald raised the price to 11 3-16. At this figure Mr. Fitzgerald called Warminster, Central Smith, Warsaw, East Emily and Fleetwood. Mr. Gillespie bid 11 1-8 cents for the balance of the board, calling Keene, Shearer, Selwyn, Villiers, Westwood, Oakdale, Daisy D., Pine Grove, King Edward, Maple Leaf, Myrtle, Young's Point, Fraserville, Indian River, North Dummer, Trewern, Bensfort, Cedardale, Stony Lake, Cavanville, Norwood and Killarney. Lakefield refused to sell.

Other Business.

After the buying was concluded, Mr. Switzer made a few remarks, stating that during the year he had never heard a grievance from either buyer or salesman, and everything had been most satisfactory. Some of the makers, he said, who used to board here, had dropped off, but hoped there would be no more do so and that an effort would also be made to get back the delinquent ones.

A resolution was passed to be forwarded to the department approving of the installation in factories of cool curing room and favouring the granting of a bonus of not less than two hundred dollars to all those who put them in.

It was decided to hold the annual meeting on the first Saturday in March. A vote of thanks was tendered the Bank of Montreal for the use of their room for the meetings, and also to the press.

The Board then adjourned.

INDIGESTION GOES IN FIVE MINUTES

Heartburn, Dyspepsia, Gas and Other Stomach Misery Vanishes

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch Gas and Eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of Dizziness, Heartburn, Fulness, Nausea, Bad taste in mouth and stomach, headache—this is Indigestion.

A full case of Pape's Diapepsin costs only 50 cents and will thoroughly cure your out-of-order stomach, and leave sufficient about the house in case some one else in the family may suffer from stomach trouble or Indigestion.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula plainly printed on these decent cases, then you will understand why Dyspeptic trouble of all kinds must go, and why they usually relieve sour, out-of-order stomachs or Indigestion in five minutes. Diapepsin is harmless and tastes like candy, though each dose contains power sufficient to digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite, but what will please you most is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh, and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for Biliousness or Constipation.

This city will have many Diapepsin cranks, as some people will call them, but you will be cranky about this splendid stomach preparation too, if you ever try a little for Indigestion or Gastritis or any Stomach misery.

Get some now this minute, and forever rid yourself of Stomach Trouble and Indigestion.

THE PRACTICE of OPTOMETRY

The Science of how to furnish right glasses when needed. Eye Examination to determine the necessity for glasses.

The furnishings of glasses needed has in the past decade become almost an absolute and exact science, which is based upon purely mathematical and optical principals. This is now so firmly established that laws regulating the practice of Optometry are written in the statute books of 24 of the States of America, two of the Provinces of Canada, and in Great Britain. It is a foregone conclusion that similar legislation will be enacted in other States and Provinces. We believe that it is not possible to examine too thoroughly, to make the mathematical calculation too carefully for the eye, when so much comfort, happiness, and ability to earn a livelihood, is so dependent upon such.

KNOW THE QUALITY

How are you to tell the quality of gold in the frames or eyeglass mounts you are buying? This is a mighty important thing to be able to do. Can you do it?

Yes, there is one sure way. See that the name "FOWLER" is stamped on the bridge of the frame or eyeglass mount you buy.

"Tags!" Yes, there are tags on our goods that are a guarantee, but we go a step farther in stamping the name "FOWLER" on the bridge, which means that we know that the frame or mounting bearing our monogram is made specially for us, and contains a standard quality and quantity of gold, and is positively guaranteed by us. WHAT THE DECISION MEANS.

The decision of the Judicial committee of the Privy Council in the Ontario Bank case, which was made public yesterday, means that the shareholders of the defunct bank will be called upon, under the double liability clause of the Bank act, to pay to the Bank of Montreal a sum amounting to about a million and a half dollars, to make up the amount by which the Ontario Bank's liabilities exceed its assets.

Argument on the part of the appellant turned mainly on two clauses. It was said the use of the word "purchase," colnse 2, shows that there was a sale of at least part of the assets of the Ontario Bank within the meaning of the bank act, and that at any rate there was a sale of good-will, which in reality was the only asset the Ontario Bank possessed. "It is, however, clear," says the judgment, "that the Bank of Montreal did not purchase or intend to purchase the call and current loans and overdue debts of the Ontario Bank for its own profit as a matter of bargain. Read in the light of the circumstances in which the deed was made, the expression means that those loans and debts were made over, absolutely to the Bank of Montreal as agents and attorneys of the Ontario Bank for the purpose of discharging that bank's obligations to its outside creditors. It cannot be doubted that on the tone and construction of the deed, if there had been any profit on that part of the transaction, which was most improbable, if not impossible, the profit would not have inured to the benefit of the Bank of Montreal."

THE REAL ISSUES.

A Conservative evening contemporary says that it would be "amusing" if the Laurier candidate were defeated in Drummond and Arthabaska on Wednesday. What there can be "amusing" to a patriotic Canadian in the triumph of pleas of national disintegration, it is difficult to fancy. The loss of a seat would not affect the Laurier government; it would require the loss of several seats to offset the weakening in the ranks of Mr. Borden, the Conservative leader, caused by his dismissal of his most able lieutenants and the pending displacement of several of his prominent followers, whose room, according to some of his journalistic supporters, is preferable to their company. There would be nothing "amusing" in the triumph, even in one constituency, of a policy cutting us adrift from the Mother Country; in the triumph of a policy aimed at the destruction of national harmony, such as the success of the Bourassa-Monk-Borden propaganda now being preached in Drummond and Arthabaska would mean. Mr. Borden, the Conservative leader is, at least, a sleeping partner in the unholy alliance, that makes racial schism its stock in trade. Mr Borden, as leader of the Conservative party, would be expected to utter at least one little chirp to show what side he stands upon. He is leaving the field of battle against the Laurier government to the race cry resurrectionists. By his silence he is condoning the situation, and practically aiding the faction that denounces everything British or Imperial, that would cut Canada loose from imperial connection. Mr. Borden is as effectually aiding the race-cry people as are some of his out-spoken supporters. Hon. Robert Rogers, of Manitoba, and Hon. Geo E. Foster, who was shelved, but refuses to stay shelved, advise the voters of Drummond and Arthabaska to vote against Laurier, which can only be done by voting for the anti-navy, anti-British, and, necessarily, anti-Canada candidate. The work of the Opposition party in this riding is aimed at undoing the work of Canadian national harmony and imperial solidarity of all the past great men in our public life. Sir George Cartier, the harness-mate, of Sir John Macdonald, and that great statesman himself, whose public lives were devoted to strengthening the Imperial bond and developing a Canadian national spirit. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has spent his public life in the great work of fusing the composite and complex population of Canada, removing causes of friction and welding Canadians into one harmonious whole. Undoing all this work is the aim of the so-called Nationalist party in Drummond and Arthabaska; an aim that represents the entry of the thin edge of the wedge. Yet, we find a Conservative journal thinking that it would be "amusing" to have this cause triumph. This triumph might be easily the beginning of the undoing of the work of the Fathers of Confederation, of Cartier, Macdonald and Laurier. Even the Toronto News sees the thing more clearly. It says.

"The News cannot hope that the Monk-Bourassa combination will succeed in Drummond and Arthabaska. . . . . We would welcome a change of Government at Ottawa, but not by an alliance with the Nationalists. It would be against the true interests of the Conservative party, of the Dominion and of the Empire that a Nationalist group should have power in the House of Commons to dictate the policy of both parties and practically to determine the relations between the Dominion and the Mother Country, and drive us on towards separation and independence."

The issue is clean cut. The Laurier candidate stands for British connection, for sharing the burden of imperial naval defence, coincidently with providing for our own; for a united Canada, with creed and race distinctions relegated to their proper place in individual life, for a common ambition to perform every duty that will tend to the progress of Canada, and its development into a great nation within the Empire.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The condition of the Inter-colonial Railway is improving. The surplus on the operations of the past year was $623,164. The commission is more than earning its commission.

General Lord Kitchener's career of victory and triumph over his enemies is drawing to a close. He is to meet his match at last. It is reported that he is about to be married.

"Down with Laurier, the militarist and imperialist!" cry the Quebec Nationalists, says the London Advertiser. "Down with Laurier, the tinpot navalist and anti-imperialist!" cry his Ontario enemies.

A report on the trade of Irish ports—the sixth of its kind — covering last year, shows the total imports and export trade reached a value of £125,675,847, an increase of £8,658,079 over the previous year. The figures exceed the records of the preceding five years.

The United States papers are full of "stories" about the loss of balloonists in the wilds of Canada. They will realize that, while the resources of the United States are all in sight, Canada has almost endless natural resources invisible commercially, but still very substantial.

The high cost of living is bad enough, but when it comes to an increase in the cost of dying things have come to a sad pass. The doctors are demanding a rise in their fees. It comes to this that we shall be compelled to resolve to die a natural death—without medical assistance.

About 25 per cent. or $15,378,600 of our Customs revenue. (1909-10, $61,-694,239) come from dry goods and articles of clothing; 20 per cent. or $12,-511,900 from metals and manufactures of metals; about 9 per cent. or $5,677,200 from wines and liquors; 7 per cent. or $4,258,900 from sugar products, fruits and nuts; 5 per cent. or $3,209,400 from coal. Paper and its manufactures and fancy goods yield about 2 per cent. each.

In Toronto the autumn increase of cost in the price of milk went into effect November 1st. The Toronto people have to pay 9 cents per quart. Somebody is skimming a bonanza off milk, or skimming it off the public. Farmers who send their milk to the cheese factories think themselves well paid if they realize 2 cents per quart for their milk. Somebody in Toronto gets a profit of seven cents clear over what the prime producer—the farmer—considers a good, legitimate profit.

It is stated, says the Brantford Expositor, that a million dollar paper mill, in which American newspaper publishers are interested, is to be built at the "Soo," adding to a plant which is said to already involve an investment of $40,000,000, and to give employment to 6,000 men. All this gigantic business, meaning so much to New Ontario, might have been lost to the country had not the Ross Government come to the rescue of the "Soo" industries at a time when their very existence was threatened. The provincial treasury did not lose a cent financially by the step then taken, while the entire country has been immensely the gainer.

WHY PORK IS HIGH.

(Hamilton Times)

There is a great scarcity of flesh foods throughout the world, and the increase in prices is not peculiar to Hamilton or Canada. We export a large quantity of pork and beef, but our exports of pork are less than in some recent years. We need it at home, and are ready to pay high prices for it. Great Britain cries out for more, and although her imports were larger in 1908 than in any year since 1903, they were 1,080,000 cwt. short in 1909, and this year they are likely to be less still. The following statement, from "Country Life," shows the situation of Britain's pork supply.

Year	Imported cwt.	British cwt.
1904	6,258,000	1,293,000
1905	6,302,000	1,107,000
1906	6,596,000	958,000
1907	6,381,000	940,000
1908	7,008,000	745,000
1909	5,943,000	499,000

Britain draws largely on the Netherlands and Denmark for pork. Last year the British imports from Canada and the United States were 914,000 cwts. short. A great stimulus has been given to swine-breeding in the old country by the high prices prevailing, and it is hoped that the falling off in home production of meats will be checked. Britain sends to the colonies and foreign countries about £30,000,000 a year for pig products.

MR. BRODEUR'S IMPERIAL UTTERANCE.

(Ottawa Free Press)

Members of the Federal Government have been accused by their opponents of presenting their naval policy in one light in Ontario, and in another and very different light in Quebec. Here is an extract from Hon. Mr. Brodeur's speech to a French-Canadian audience at the nominations in Drummond and Arthabaskaville, as reported in Mr. Bourassa's paper, Le Devoir:

"Our marine has been created in order to protect our coasts and our export trade (commerce d'exportation). IT HAS BEEN CREATED ALSO TO AID GREAT BRITAIN, IN CASE OF NEED, IN ORDER THAT THE MOTHER COUNTRY MAY CONSERVE HER SUPREMACY OF THE SEAS NECESSARY TO OUR OWN WELFARE. It is this supremacy that conserves and will conserve the rights and liberties accorded us by Great Britain. And in speaking thus, I do not dissociate myself from my ministerial responsibility. I speak in my capacity of minister, and in the name of the Government."

This utterance is a sufficient reply to the mis-representation of the Government in this Province.

The Nationalists are denouncing the naval policy as a surrender to Imperialism, which they paint in terrifying colours. Mr. Bourassa tells his audiences that in twenty years a Canadian youth may be torn from the arms of his parents by a pressgang to fight the battles of England in distant seas. This is as far from the truth as the language of some Ontario journals, which describes the naval project as a conspiracy to separate Canada from the Empire.

Members of the Government exhibit their policy in the same aspect in all the provinces. But how the Government's enemies differ in their presentation of it!

A STORY OF CANADIAN PROGRESS.

(London Advertiser.)

Canada's progress is vividly illustrated in the annual report of the Department of the Interior.

Last year proved to be the most satisfactory since the department was organized in 1873. The sale of Dominion lands reached the record figures of $3,407,340.82, an increase of nearly $800,000 over the previous twelve months, and double the total revenue of ten years ago, 1899-1900.

Homestead statistics are especially significant. Free homesteads in the new provinces were taken up by 41,-508 settlers during the twelve months ending March 30 last. More than half of the entries were made by Canadians, Britishers and Americans, the area settled totalling 6,650,880 acres. With the exception of 1908, this is the best on record.

British immigration shows a big increase over the previous twelve months, a few less than 80,000 coming in from the United Kingdom. Continental arrivals jumped from 34,175 in 1908-09 to 45,206 in 1909-10. Taking into consideration the high standard now required by the Dominion regulations, these figures make high praise for the Government's propaganda.

Another notable feature of the report is the returns from the United States. Last year 100,000 of the most desirable class entered the country, all previous records being broken.

There is no evidence of a diminution in the volume of newcomers from across the border, although several western states have joined hands with the railways in a desperate effort to check it.

Growth Of Woman Movement In Past Half Century

The remarkable growth of the woman movement in the last fifty years and her ever increasing influence on Public Opinion and private affairs, is well set out in an article in which the London Times surveys the period. The article appears in the first Times Women's Supplement, issued last Saturday a most excellent issue, which is itself a very remarkable testimony to the new position of women, as also is the nature of the articles which this supplement contains.

"Up to the middle of the last century," says the Times, "in spite of the fact that the Sovereign was a woman, and a 'constant reader,' the references to women (who did not, of course, then take a great part in public affairs) were not very frequent. And yet there were women, and to spare.

"But the spirit of the age, and the Times with it, was begining to change. Two or three years after a review had appeared in its columns of 'Shirley, by Currer Bell,' it published a long letter from a woman correspondent which ended with the following appeal: 'Whatever absurdities may be spoken about women's rights a deep feeling of shame must attend the contemplation of women's wrongs; and surely the Times will give its powerful support to the demand that such wrongs should be earnestly considered.'

"From that time forward letters and articles dealing with subjects of particular interest to women began to appear in the paper with increasing frequency, since in this, as in all other matters, the letter-box of the Times was bound to reflect Public Opinion. It was, however, a quaintly different Public Opinion from what it is to-day.

"Even so late as 1869 Lady Portsmouth, in a letter to the editor, was constrained to announce her withdrawal from the committee of the first woman's club that was founded in London because she disapproved of the proposed admission of men to the visitors' room. A year or two later, when it was announced that forty women were to be employed in the Post Office, the Controller made a vigorous protest against the innovation because of the grievous dangers, moral and official, likely to result from so extraordinary a course.

"But the snowball, which was one day to become an avalanche, had fairly started on its extraordinary course, sweeping out of its way Controllers and others who sought to stay the women's movement. Meetings in support of emancipation began to be held in all parts of the country, and were duly reported in our columns, side by side with long letters from Miss Emily Faithful, Mrs. Fawcett, and other pioneers.

"Except, however, in these later days, women who write letters to the Times have not, as a rule, concerned themselves with political affairs. Their pens have been chiefly inspired by the calls of charity, philanthropy, humanity, and every cause that makes its appeal to the heart by reason of the claims of the suffering, the weak, and the unprotected, and hosts of similar questions affecting the happiness and welfare of the race.

"And in themselves they represent all that is best in the womanhood of England, in intellect, in position, in energy, in high ideals, and in practical common-sense."

Prof. Gilbert Murray, writing in the same issue, says: "Whatever may happen in the future, it seems clear that up to the present the enfranchisement of women has resulted in an improvement, not a deterioration, of women's health, at any rate among the well-to-do classes. What becomes, then, of our physiological argument? Is it contradicted by facts? Not at all. It only needs better understanding."

Pain in Heart

"For two years I had pain in my heart, back and left side. Could not draw a deep breath or lie on left side, and any little exertion would cause palpitation. Under advice I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine. I took about thirteen bottles, am in better health than I ever was, and have gained 14 pounds."

MRS. LILLIE THOMAS,
Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

For many years Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has been very successful in the treatment of heart troubles, because of its tonic effect upon the heart nerves and muscles. Even in severe cases of long standing it has frequently prolonged life for many years after doctors had given up all hope, as proven by thousands of letters we have received from grateful people.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

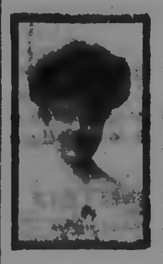
By Ruth Cameron

The gambling element has been defeated in Nevada. The gamblers have been beaten down gradually through the work of the Church, the University of Nevada, AND THE WOMAN'S ORGANIZATIONS, which combined brought legislative enactment."

That is quoted from one of the largest and most conservative papers in the United States.

Doesn't it make you proud, women of America?

Doesn't it make one of those lovely awful thrills creep up your back—the kind you feel when you hear the bugle call, or when the hero on the stage proclaims his intention of dying rather than forsw or his allegiance to the flag and the orchestra plays softly, "O say, can you see"?



I think it ought to.

For it means that our sex has won a full recognition of its right and ability to help housecleaning the city and the state as well as the home.

The tribute that the great newspaper, more or less unconsciously, gives us, is but one of the many that are continually being paid the power of the awakened woman to get good things done for her state and country.

Here are a few of them:

The President of the American Civic Association, in his book on his experiences in that position, has this to say of women's work: "I firmly believe that judging from my experience, national in its scope, and covering many scores of communities, it is only through the action of women that efficient, final, and satisfactory work for civic regeneration can be brought through".

In a recent magazine article it is stated that "when Henry Turner Bailey lectured on art at the last biennial, he voiced a plea for the mountain laurel as the national flower, assuring the women that their support was the one needed factor."

And again, that a well known politician said: "When a good woman makes up her mind that something ought to be done, you'd better make up your mind that she's going to see it through, and when a hundred of them get together you might as well try to stop a steam road roller with a toothpick as to put a spoke in their wheel."

All this seems to be a state of affairs no less natural and inevitable than desirable.

Women, as a class, have more leisure than men. In the home, if there is any little social obligation to be settled, any matter of the children's education to be attended to, in fact any little business outside of the general routine of the home to be dispatched it is usually the woman who attends to it because the man of the house is too busy in the day time and too fagged at night.

Why, then, shouldn't it be the most natural thing in the world that any neglected business of civic betterment should become part of women's interests.

It IS the most natural thing in the world, and as such it has come to pass, and is coming to pass more fully every day.

Women of America, I congratulate you!

May you ever be blamingly enthusiastic for reform and passionately eager for the right, without crossing the line into sentimentality and hysteria!

May you justify the belief of those who think you capable of considered and farsighted, as well as altruistic action!

May you disappoint the scoffs of those who think you will always be swayed by short-sighted sentimentality and emotionalism.

In a word, Women of America, may you be worthy of your great opportunity!

Ruth Cameron

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

My breath was a little taken away. I looked at her in surprise. Her cheeks were flushed, her voice had shaken with something more like anger than any form of pathos. I was at a loss how to answer her, and while I hesitated the interruption which I had been praying for came, though from a strange quarter. My door was pushed a few inches open, and I heard Lady Angela's clear young voice.

"Are you there, Mr. Ducaine? May I come in?"

Before I could answer she stood upon the threshold. I saw the delightful little smile fade from her lips as she looked in. She hesitated, and seemed for a moment about to retreat.

"Please come in, Lady Angela," I begged, eagerly.

She came slowly forward.

"I must apologize for my abominable country manners," she said, resting the tips of her fingers for a moment in mine. "I saw your door was not latched, and it never occurred to me to knock."

It was not necessary. I assured her. "A front door which does not boast a knocker or a bell must expect to be taken liberties with. But it is a great surprise to see you here. I had no idea that any one was at Rowchester, or expected there, except Lord Blenavon. Has the Duke returned?"

She shook her head.

"I came down alone," she answered. "I found London dull. Let me see, I am sure that I know your face, do I not?" she added, turning to Blanche Moyat with a smile. "You live in Brasted, surely?"

"I am Miss Moyat," Blanche answered quietly.

"Of course. Dear me! I ought to have recognized you. We have been neighbours for a good many years.

"I will wish you good-afternoon, Mr. Ducaine," Blanche said, turning to me. "Good afternoon, your Ladyship," she added a little awkwardly.

I opened the door for her.

"I will come down and see your father the first evening I have to spare," I said. "I hope you will tell him from me that I should have been before, but for the luxury of having some work to do."

"I will tell him," she said almost inaudibly.

"And thank you very much for coming to inquire after me," I added. "Good afternoon."

"Good afternoon, Mr. Ducaine."

I closed the door. Lady Angela was lounging in my easy chair with a slight smile upon her lips.

"Two lady callers in one afternoon, Mr. Ducaine," she remarked quietly. "You will lose your head, I am afraid."

"I can assure you, Lady Angela," I answered, "that there is not the slightest fear of such a catastrophe."

She sat looking meditatively into the fire, swinging her dogskin gloves in her hands. She wore a plain pearl grey walking dress and deerstalker hat with a single quill in it. The severe but immaculate simplicity of her toilette might have been designed to accentuate the barbarities of Blanche Moyat's cheap finery.

"I understood that you would be in town for at least three weeks," I remarked. "I trust that his Grace is well."

"I trust that he is," she answered. "I see nothing of him in London. He has company meetings and political work every moment of his time. I do not believe that there is any one who works harder."

"He has, at least," I remarked, "the compensation of success."

"You are wondering, I suppose," she said, looking up at me quickly, "what has brought me back again so soon."

"I certainly did not expect you," I admitted.

She rose abruptly.

"Come outside," she said, "and I will show you. Bring your hat."

We passed into the March twilight. She led the way down the cliff and towards the great silent stretch of salt marshes. An evening wind, sharp with brine, was blowing in from the ocean, stirring the surface of the long creeks into silent ripples, and bending landwards the thin streaks of white smoke rising amongst the red-tiled roofs of the village. I felt the delicate sting of it upon my cheeks. Lady Angela half closed her eyes as she turned her face seawards.

"I came for this," she murmured. "There is nothing like it anywhere else."

We stood there in silence for several long minutes. Then she turned to me with a little sigh.

"I am content," she said. "Will you come up and dine with us tonight? Blenavon will be there, you know."

I hesitated.

"I am afraid it is rather a bother to you to leave your work," she continued, "but I am not offering you idle hospitality. I really want you to come."

"In that case," I answered, "of course I shall be delighted."

She pointed to Brasted Rouge away on the other side of the village. I noticed for the first time that it was all lit up.

"Have you heard anything of your new neighbours?" she asked.

"Only their names," I answered. "I did not even know that they had arrived."

"There is only a woman, I believe," she said. "I have met her abroad, and I dislike her greatly. I hear that my brother spends most of his time with her, and that he has dined there the last three nights. It is not safe or wise of him, for many reasons. I want to stop it. That is why I have asked you to come to us."

"It is quite sufficient," I told her. "If you want me for any reason I will come. I am two days ahead of my work."

We threaded our way amongst the creeks. All the time the salt wind blew upon us, and the smell of fresh seaweed seemed to fill the air with ozone. Just as we came in sight of the road we heard the thunder of hoofs behind. We turned around. It was Blenavon, riding side by side with a lady who was a stranger to me. Her figure was slim, but elegant. I caught a glimpse of her face as they flashed by, and it puzzled me. Her hair was almost straw coloured, her complexion was negative, her features were certainly not good. Yet there was something about her attractive, something which set me guessing at once as to the colour of her eyes, the quality of her voice, if she could speak. Blenavon reined in his horse.

"So you have turned up, Angela," he remarked, looking at her a little nervously. "You remember Mrs. Smith-Lessing, don't you—down at Bordighera, you know?"

Angela shook her head, but she never glanced towards the woman who sat there with expectant smile.

"I am afraid that I do not," she said. "I remember a good many things about Bordighera, but not Mrs. Smith-Lessing. I shall see you at dinner-time, Blenavon. I have some messages for you."

I saw the whip come down upon the woman's horse, but I did not dare to look into her face. Blenavon, with a smothered oath and a black look at his sister, galloped after her. I rejoined Lady Angela, who was already in the road.

"Dear me," she said, "what a magnificent nerve that woman must have! To dare to imagine that I should receive her! Why, she is known in every capital in Europe—a police spy, a creature whose brains and body and soul are to be bought by any one's gold."

"What on earth can such a woman want here?" I remarked.

"In hiding, very likely," Lady Angela remarked. "Or perhaps she may be an additional complication for you."

I laughed a little scornfully.

"You, too, are getting suspicious," I declared. "The Prince and Mrs. Smith-Lessing are a strong combination."

"Be careful then that they are not too strong for you," she answered, smiling. "I have heard a famous boast of Mrs. Smith-Lessing's, that never a man nor a lock has yet resisted her."

I thought of her face as I had seen it in the half light—a faint impression of delicate colourlessness, and for the life of me I could not help a little shiver. Lady Angela looked at me in surprise.

"Are you cold?" she asked. "Let us walk more quickly."

"It is always cold at this time in the evening," I remarked. "It is the mist coming up from the marshes. One feels it at unexpected moments."

"I am not going to take you any farther," she declared, "especially as you are coming up to-night. Eight o'clock, remember. Go and salve your conscience with some work."

I protested, but she was firm. So I stood by the gate and watched her slim young figure disappear in the gathering shadows.

CHAPTER XVI.

LADY ANGELA'S ENGAGEMENT.

I dined that night at Rowchester. Lord Blenavon was sulky, and Lady Angela was only fitfully gay. It was not altogether a cheerful party. Lady Angela left us the moment Blenavon produced his cigarette-case.

"Do not stay too long, Mr. Ducaine," she said, as I held the door open for her. "I want a lesson at billiards."

I bowed and returned to my seat. Blenavon was leaning back in his chair, smoking thoughtfully.

"My sister," he remarked, looking up at the ceiling and speaking as though to himself, "would make an admirable heroine for the psychological novelist. She is a bundle of fancies; one can never rely upon what she is going to do. What other girl in the world would get engaged on the Thursday, and come down here on the Friday to think it over, leaving, of course, her fiancé in town. Doesn't that strike you as singular?"

"Is it," I asked calmly, "a genuine case?"

Lord Blenavon nodded.

"I do not think that it is a secret," he said, helping himself to wine and passing the decanter. "She has made up her mind at last to marry Mostyn Ray. The affair has been hanging about for more than a year. In fact, I think that there was something said about it before Ray went abroad. Personally, I think that he is too old. I don't mind saying so to you, because that has been my opinion all along. However, I suppose it is all settled now."

I kept my eyes fixed upon the wineglass in front of me, but the things which I saw, no four walls had ever enclosed. One moment the rush of the sea was in my ears, another I was lying upon the little horsehair couch in my sitting-room. I felt her soft white fingers upon my pulse and fore head. Again I saw her leaning down from the saddle of her great brown horse, and heard her voice, slow, emotionless, yet always with its strange power to play upon my heartstrings. And yet, while the grey seas of despair were closing over my head I sat there with a stereotyped smile upon my lips, fingering carelessly the stem of my wineglass, unwilling guest of an unwilling host. I do not know how long we sat there in silence, but it seemed to me an eternity for all the time I knew that Blenavon was watching me. I felt like a victim upon the rack, whilst he, the executioner, held the cords.

I do not think, however, that he learnt anything from my face.

With a little shrug of the shoulders he abandoned the subject.

"By-the-bye, Ducaine," he said, "I hope you won't mind my asking you a rather personal question."

"If it is only personal," I answered quietly, "not at all. As you know, I may not discuss any subject connected with my work."

"Quite so! I only want to know whether your secretarial duties begin and end with your work on the Council of Defence, or are you at all in my father's confidence as regards his private affairs?"

"I am temporary secretary to the Council of Defence only, Lord Blenavon," I answered. "I know nothing whatever of your father's private affairs. He has his own man of business."

I am not sure whether he believed me. He cracked some walnuts and commenced peeling them.

"My father will never listen to me" he said, "but I feel sure that he makes a mistake in becoming a director of all these companies. Politics should be quite sufficient to engross his time, and the money cannot be so much of an object to him. I don't suppose his holdings are large, but I am quite sure that one or two of those Australian gold mines are dicky, and you know he was an enormous holder of Chartereds, and wouldn't sell, worse luck! Of course I'm not afraid of his losing in the long run, but it isn't exactly a dignified thing to be associated with those concerns that aren't exactly A1. His name might lead people into speculations who couldn't altogether afford it."

In Dread Of Piles

Many Believe That Nothing Short of the Surgeon's Knife Will Effect Cure. They Do Not Know

The agony caused by the intense itching, the depressing and debilitating effect on the system, the dread lest a surgical operation might be necessary—these are the things which make piles or hemorrhoids so distressing.

The doctors have been recommending surgical operations as the only cure. But the surgical operation, with all its dangers and expense and pain, does not usually effect a lasting cure.

Many a case has been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after the surgical operation had failed. Here is a case which doctors gave up.

Mr. J. Mawer, Roden, Man., writes; "Dr. Chase's Ointment is a wonderful preparation. I had itching piles for over six years, and though I tried two doctors' prescriptions and used many other preparations could not obtain much benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me, and that I would have to undergo an operation.

"I bought a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment and was completely cured in one week. As this was six months ago and there has been no return of the old trouble, I believe that the cure is a permanent one."

One thing certain, Dr. Chase's Ointment will bring you relief from the dreadful itching and burning almost as soon as applied.

To make the cure thorough and lasting it is only necessary for you to keep up the treatment regularly and persistently. Don't be satisfied with relief. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure completely if you will do your part. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

When you pay more than the Rayo price for a lamp, you are paying for extra decorations that cannot add to the quality of the light. You can't pay for a better light, because there is none. An oil light has the least effect on the human eye, and the Rayo Lamp is the best oil lamp made, though low in price. You can pay $5, $10, or $20 for some other lamp, and although you get a more costly lamp, you can't get a better light than the white, mellow, diffused, unflickering light of the low-priced Rayo.

Your Old Enemy Rheumatism

CURE YOURSELF RIGHT NOW WITH "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

There is just one thing that causes Rheumatism—Uric Acid in the blood. Uric Acid is formed when either the bowels, kidneys or skin fail to rid the system of waste matter. This waste, or Urea, remains in the body and is changed into uric acid. It is this uric acid that poisons the blood, inflames the nerves, and causes Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago.

Liniments and ordinary rheumatic remedies won't cure Rheumatism, as none of such preparations go to the very root of the trouble—the blood, and the vital organs. "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest cure for rheumatism in the world. And we will tell you why.

"Fruit-a-tives", by its action on the bowels, kidneys and skin, prevents the formation of an excess of uric acid. "Fruit-a-tives" causes the bowels, kidneys and skin to throw off the waste of the body, and thus keeps the blood absolutely pure.

If you have suffered with Rheumatism, and dread a return with the coming of cold weather, start in at once to take "Fruit-a-tives" and thus defeat your old enemy. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

LABOUR CONDITIONS FOR THE MONTH OF SEPTEMBER

The State of the Various Trades in Peterborough as Reported to the Labour Gazette by its Local Representative.

INTERESTING FACTS

Mr. J. Arthur Sharp, correspondent for Peterborough to the Labour Gazette has the following report for the month of September:—

GENERAL CONDITION OF THE LABOUR MARKET

The labour market was generally active but not more so than last month. Outside workers, particularly in the building trades, had an active month. The Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company is asking for a fixed assessment of $20,000, having recently made improvements to the extent of $25,000. This will employ a large number of additional men. The contracts in connection with the new sewers in the south part of the city have been awarded, with that for the new pumping station. The Industrial Fair this year has been the most successful on record. At the last meeting of the Cheese Board, 3,081 cheeses were boarded. Wholesale and retail merchants reported trade very good.

CONDITIONS OF LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Agriculture.—Farmers were busy harvesting and threshing and preparing for fall sowing. The crops are very uneven, some fields being good, and others not more than half a crop. The potato crop is a failure in this district, the dry rot has affected them.

Lumbering.—Conditions are active.

Manufacturing.—There is little change in conditions, factories all running full time, with larger staffs of employees.

CONDITION OF PARTICULAR TRADES

Bricklayers, masons, carpenters, joiners, lathers, plasterers and painters were busy. Plumbers and gasfitters were active. Builder's labourers were very busy. Iron moulders, iron workers, helpers, core makers and machinists were active. Electrical workers and linemen had all they could do. Blacksmiths and boilermakers were busy, with woodworkers active. Printers had a good month and tailors and garment workers had plenty of work. Bakers and confectioners were busy. Butchers and meat cutters also were busy. Cigar makers report business improved. Leather workers had a good month. Railway and street railway employees were active. Teamsters and express men report business good. Unskilled labour was in good demand.

DISTRICT NOTES

Port Hope.—The International Tool Steel Company, Limited, is to put up four buildings and expend $35,000 in machinery and buildings. Kuhns & Anderton, of Beaver Falls, Pa., are to establish a branch here, and will manufacture wooden and steel doormats. The Bank of Toronto will build a new bank building this fall, the contract having been let.

The Y.M.C.A. Boy Scout Movement Is Progressing

Officers Have Been Elected—One of the Scout Masters Has Seen Service Under General Sir Robert Baden Powell

BOYS ARE ENTHUSIASTIC

A most important meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Scouts was held last Friday when Mr. Hodges was introduced to the boys by Mr. Tait, Boys' Secretary. Mr. Hodges has been thirteen years a Scout and is unquestionably one of the ablest men for a position of Scout Master in Canada to-day. He has had a very wide experience in this line, his last Scouting experiences in South Africa under Baden Powell. Shortly after being introduced, Mr. Hodges got right down to work and made a most favorable impression. The boys gathered around anxious to try him out and as a result most of the seventeen boys present can now tie the required number of knots needed to pass the tenderfoot examination. The membership will undoubtedly be on the increase now for some little time and it will not be long now till the Y.M.C.A. Boy Scouts will be sufficiently advanced to compete with their brother Scouts who under the leadership of Mr Neil, are making rapid strides and fast becoming first-class Scouts.

The following officers have been elected:—

Scout Masters.—Mr. Tait. Mr. Hodges.

Chaplain.—Rev. W. C. Riddiford.

Mr. J. Hughes, special instructor for Semephore Work, etc. The offices to be filled by the boys, such as patrol leader, etc., will be left till the boys most capable can be selected. A number of the boys will appear next Friday in uniform.

A most enjoyable evening was spent in the Boys' Department of the Y.M.C.A., Saturday, when close on to sixty boys attended a Hallowe'en party ,which was of the old time variety, including many Hallowe'en stunts, and a lovely programme from start to finish. The Social committee selected to run the same are to be congratulated on the splendid programme produced and upon the Apple pie order in which things were conducted. The programme commenced sharp at 7.15 when Mr. Hodges, the popular Scout Master favored the gathering with many up-to-date selections from his Gramophone which were very much appreciated. Then as per schedula at 8 p.m. sharp, a series of games especially suitable for such a large number were engaged in, with an occasional Hallowe'en stunt sandwiched in at intervals. These games took exceptionally well and were continued till 9 p.m., when the surprise of the Evening was introduced The reading room where the boys usually look for their literary digest was now arranged in all its etc., which if indulged in too freely would mean indigest. Suffice to say the boys made a clean up here and while this was being accomplished, our friend Mr. Hodges was again called upon. This time favoring us with a Ghost story, which was right in order as the lights were low and our friend the Ghost was on the job. Mr. Tait, Boys' Secretary, followed with a coulpe of the hair raising variety at the conclusion of which a few remarks were made, then a most successful night was brought to a close by the singing of God Save the King.

PRESENT MODE OF ELECTING SCHOOL BOARD WILL REMAIN THE SAME

Ward System Will Not Interfere With Board of Education --Regular Meeting Held Last Evening--Changes Among the Principals of Some of the City Schools.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education was held last evening, there being present Messrs. D. W. Dumble (in the chair in the absence of the chairman), B. F. Ackerman, T. H. Adams, J. Crane, W. H. Hill, Robt. Fair, and Col. Miller and Dr. Burnham.

Communications.

From Miss F. E. De La Matter, requesting that the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute be used for the graduating exercises of Nicholls Hospital in the last week of November, all expenses incurred to be paid by the hospital.—Granted.

Does Not Change.

From Dennistoun, Peck and Kerr, stating that the mode of electi n of members of the Board is provided for in chapter 34 of the statutes of 1909, section 5, sub-section 3, which reads: "The members to be elected shall be elected by the general vote of the persons qualified to vote for Public school trustees and the election shall be held at the same time and place, by the same returning officer, and in the same manner as the election of a mayor."

This is the mode in which the members of the Board have been elected in the past and the special legislation of 1909, affecting the election of councillors and the passing of by-laws, by which the city reverts to the Ward System, do not in any way effect the mode of election of members of the Board, the special legislation and by-law merely applying to the election of aldermen.—Received.

From Mr. Duncan Walker, principal of the Normal school, conveying his thanks for the honour conferred in his being elected to the new Library Board as one of the Board of Education representatives.—Received.

From A. Mowat, accepting appointment on Public Library Board and expressing his thanks.—Received.

Cadet Inspection.

Lieut.-Col. T. D. R. Hemming, who inspected the Collegiate cadets on 31st May last in his report to the Deputy Minister of Education and which has been forwarded here is very satisfactory. The report commends the officer commanding, the principal of the Collegiate and Lieut. Hodgson on the continued good work.—Received.

From H. M. Park and Letitia M. Elliott, accepting positions on the Public school teaching staff.—Received.

From the Y.M.C.A. Board of Management, asking permission to hold their domestic science class, taught by Miss Steinhoff of the Domestic Science room in the Central school.—Granted.

J. CRANE,
Chairman.

Upon motion of Messrs. Crane and Adams, the report was adopted.

School Book Fees.

Dr. Burnham asked if there was not going to be any reduction in the fees for books in the Public schools this year. Inspector Mowat who was present, stated that the purchase of a number of new books this term increased the expenditure considerably and he did not think that any decrease in the fees would be possible just now. However he believed that beginning next September there could be a substantial decrease. Dr. Burnham moved, seconded by Col. Miller, that the Secretary be instructed to furnish a statement as to the cost of the text books, and the fees received. The motion carried.

The Board then adjourned.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature restores the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life. Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J. Derocher, 485 Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and eat well."

LARGEST ADVANCE SALE THIS SEASON

The advance sale of seats for Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl" which opened this morning, was the biggest sale of the season and looks very much as if the "standing room only" sign will be hung out on Friday evening. Miss Ring and her large company will arrive by special Grand Trunk train on Friday from London, arriving at 1 p.m. In addition to the large and excellent company, two cars of scenery are carried. Peterborough is particularly fortunate in securing this attraction, as London, Hamilton, Kingston, and Ottawa are the only other one night stands in which Miss Ring is appearing in Canada.

CABINET MEMBERS HAVE RESIGNED

PARIS, FRANCE, NOV. 2—President Fallieres this morning received the resignations of all the members of Premier Briand's cabinet, following the resolutions of the Chamber of Deputies sustaining Briand in his iron-handed methods of suppressing the recent railroad strike riots. It is understood Briand will form a new cabinet, all in accord with him, letting the disaffected colleagues drop.

A CHARMING FILM

"The Song That Reached His Heart" at the Princess Theatre

A hote play that tells a direct and simple story, and that yet possesses dramatic possibilities is being shown at the Princess theatre just now in an Edison 1,000 foot film entitled, "The Song that Reached His Heart." It is a story o fthe lumber regions of Western Canada. The proper stage setting for this cahrming story of romance and love was secured through the kindness of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is one of the most pleasing films that the Edison people have turned out, and is worth seeing by everyone

THE WOMEN OF INDIA AS SEEN BY A MISSIONARY

Interesting Address Given by Dr. Everett G. Smith at Thankoffering Service of Murray St. Ladies' Mission Circle.

SOME EXPERIENCES

The Thank offering service of Murray street Ladies' Mission Circle last night was largely attended and a very enjoyable time was spent. Mrs. Dr. Hunter presided. She read a chapter from the Bible, after which Mrs. Ellis led in prayer. This was followed by a much appreciated solo by Mrs. Maley.

Dr. Everett G. Smith, who has spent seventeen years in India as a medical missionary, then addressed the audience, taking as his subject, "The Women of India." His address was the feature of the evening, and was greatly enjoyed by the audience.

Dr. Smith explained very clearly the mode of living, and the difficulties under which some of the women do live, and gave a very interesting account of his experience among them as a medical man. Among the more important of his remarks are the following:

"The women of China are theoretically dependent upon the men, There are no suffragettes or anything of that sort. The women have no voice in the government whatever. They have nothing to do with the administering of their religion; even their own scriptures say that women are not capable of looking after themselves."

"There are a great many things done that should not be done in the carrying out of their religious rights. One thing is the early marriage of their children. They believe that it was Eve that sinned first; they think that the women are rather soft and can be led into anything, and therefore they consider them not capable of choosing a husband."

"There are millions and millions of women who become widows before they reach their teens and they have to remain so. The women get no education, especially the lower and poorer classes. They have, also, to obey their husbands. Let a man be ever so unfaithful, it is his wife's place to keep quiet. A peculiarity of these women is that they never wear hats. They decorate their foreheads. Of course those with husbands are the only ones who can do this. The women have nothing to do with the religious work, except to make offerings. And regarding education, there are often twenty-five hundred young men graduate from the government schools in a year. Then they refuse to marry wives who are illiterate. This has caused a lot of the people to allow their daughters to go to school. Of course they can only attend school until they are thirteen and then their mothers make them quit. They can learn sewing then, until they get a chance to get married. There is no place in India for the women who are not married. Girls who fail to get a husband are often handed over to become the wives of old men of seventy and eighty, and often their fathers will pay young men three and four hundred dollars to marry their daughters. The poor women work as coolies and such work, but there is one class who never do that. This class is the Brahmins. Among the Hindus, a member of the sacred caste, who claims to have proceeded from the mouth of Brahma, one of the deities of the Hindu triad, and who are noted for their many minute observations and their severe penances, would starve almost before they would work. They consider begging far above working, and these people are considered very holy and are treated with respect. They would not work in the sight of the people, but when they are forced to work, they take to their homes. They will take rice, for instance, and pound it at home, but they will only do this when the sting of poverty makes them.

"The Mohammedans were the first to start the oppression of the women. They waged war against their neighbours, making them submit to them and accept their religion. Women who are wealthy enough do without working, and are gossipers. They visit each other, and the visiting is carried on in a peculiar way. These women are kept secluded all the time, they are not allowed to present themselves to the people at all. When they travel they are in a covered carriage, and when going on the train it is like getting a rat out of one cage into another. Men stand up on either side and hold a sheet up to prevent any person from seeing them, and there is also a closed compartment in the train for them. When they go on a visit to their neighbours, they are carried in a covered box, and not let out until they are landed inside."

"The doctors are very scarce in India, especially lady doctors. Only on rare occasions will they allow a gentleman doctor to attend a lady, and when they do, one has to do it under extreme difficulties. When a woman dies, they will not even let you see her toes. The scarceness of the lady doctors, therefore, makes it difficult. I venture to say that taking in a scope of three million people, there are not more than three lady doctors. The Gothic tribes are very weak and sickly. They get no exercise and eat a lot, so that they are very unhealthy all the time. And when the child-mothers take the fever, they are starved as a cure until they are as thin as a straw."

"The women of India have susceptibility just as we have. They suffer suspicions, fear and cruelty and when a child is born, it cannot be taken from the house until it is three months old. They think that if any person looks at the child before that time, it will be stricken with evil and will die. There is one time in the year the women enjoy freedom and a good time. On that day they are allowed to take their husbands and family and go to see their parents. Often in one house as many as sixty people sit down to one table. The women just glory when the day comes when they can go and see their mothers, and when they are told that God has a house and home for them, they understand often better than we do. These people when they get friendly, want to have the missionary's wife call on them, and she gets a chance to explain religion to them in that way. Also, when women are sometimes brought to the hospitals, there is a chance to teach them, and often a gathering takes place in a room in the hospital, and there people are taught. Often, as many as eighty people have assembled in a room only 7 1-2 ft. by 20 ft. and during the meeting if any of the patients died, there would almost be a panic. They would run out and hammer their heads and in a very short time every patient, no matter how ill they would be, would be taken out of the hospital and would not be returned for at least a couple of weeks. When a girl dies in a house, it is supposed to be contaminated, and certain religious rites must be performed before things are made right again.

Dr. Smith also went on to describe the temperature there, as compared with ours. He said when the temperature was 58 deg. they were cold and had to be covered while sleeping, with blankets. And where a child was sick, pots of charcoal were burned near the bed to keep it warm, and often the clothes catch fire and the children get burned. He also gave a brief account of the educational circumstances. He said that if a person passed an examination after three or four trials, he was considered pretty smart, and he knew boys to try as often as sixteen and seventeen times to pass the matriculation and then fail.

At the close of Dr. Smith's address he and Mrs. Smith sang a funeral hymn in the Indian tongue, entitled in our language, "All in this world is vanity," and another entitled, "Oh Jesus, come to Jesus, come quick, He is ready to receive you."

Rev. Mr. Webb then closed the meeting by pronouncing the benediction.

A number of the audience remained to look at some pictures of India, which the doctor had brought to show those who cared to look at them.

Electrolier Dedicated To The Memory Of Departed Member Of St. John's

The communion service at St. John's church on the morning of All Saints day was largely attended and was of a very devotional character. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Mr. Carpenter. Mention was made of former clergy and former parishioners and special prayers were offered in remembrance of them.

At the conclusion of the service, a special dedicatory service was held to dedicate two electroliers which have been placed in the sanctuary to the memory of departed members of the congregation. The inscriptions on the one to the left read: "In loving memory of Wm. Erasmus Sherwood, Jan. 7th, 1882, and Charlotte Erskine Sherwood, March 27th, 1910." The one on the right read: "In loving memory of one of Christ's little ones. Blessed are the pure of heart."

Canon Davidson made an address appropriate to the occasion, recalling memories of those commemorated.

Mr. Wm. F. Sherwood had been a most faithful and regular member of the congregation in days gone by, and had given strong support to the church when greatly needed. His widow, Mrs. Sherwood, had continued to be one of the most loyal and devoted members of St. John's up till the time of her death last year, her interest being manifested, even when been gabsent from Peterborough. She had been a factor in the life of the congregation and her family showed her devotion.

The other electrolier erected was anonymously given and recalled the life of a beautiful child who would, the speaker hoped, always be of especial interest to the children. The two standards together would speak eloquently of the beautiful life of innocents and the richer and more mature and developed glory of old age.

Two different exemplifications of the great saintly and heavenly lives of which the electroliers would be reminders, with their shiny lights. During the words of dedication, which were then said, the lights flashed forth from the electroliers for the first time. The appropriate prayers for the deceased and their families, and for the usefulness of the light concluded the service.

HAD HIS EYES OPEN

If Doughty Colonel Is Beaten In the Present New York State Campaign He Knows How to Use His Defeat to His Own Profit—Scouts Idea That Beating Means Loss of His Political Prestige.

New York, Nov. 2.—If the election next week in New York goes against Roosevelt and his candidate for governor is defeated, he has his answer ready, and it is going to be along this line.

There was arrayed against me every "crooked" corporation, every "malefactor of great wealth," every plunderer of the people, every corrupt financial interest that wants to continue corruptly to make money. In addition there was foul treachery among the thieves and grafters of my own party, whom I had thrown out of control and who went over to the enemy. I stood for the people and against the plunderers in that fight, and I am proud of it. I have at least succeeded in purifying the Republican party in the great State of New York.

This is the information that comes from a close friend of the colonel's who has been in touch with him since his return to this country from Africa. The man is authority for the statement that Col. Roosevelt went into the fight with his eyes open and fully aware of conditions, and that, therefore, the developments have not surprised him.

That defeat here will put him out of politics, or even diminish his hold upon the people of the country, the colonel is said to regard as particularly absurd. He believes that if beaten, under the circumstances and the way in which he proposes to explain them, it will strengthen him tremendously with the masses, especially in the west, where the ferocity of his attacks upon the corporations and the "interests," and his appeal to the mob, strike the old keynote that formed the basis of his popularity in that section of the country.

Mr. Roosevelt, his friends say, reached the determination to make this fight in New York while on the first western trip the last part of April. It was on the train in Kansas that he made up his mind to accept the defiance of William Barnes, jr., and put on his war paint. At that time he is stated to have expressed absolute certainty of winning the fight for control of the Saratoga convention, the election of himself as temporary chairman and the nomination of the ticket. Of his power to defeat the Barnes-Sherman-Woodruff combination he had no doubt.

At the same time he is said to have voiced the view that he did not expect to win the ticket and to have forecast in private conversation the conditions that exist now, anticipating the "laying down" of the "old guard" leaders, the hostility of the financial interests and the opposition of a large part of the New York press.

Mr. Henri is telling the readers of his newspapers that the reason so many New York newspapers that have usually supported the Republican candidate are just now arrayed against Mr. Stimson is because Col. Roosevelt, who is Stimson's sponsor, has from time to time referred to the owners or editors of these newspapers as "liars," "unprincipled scoundrels," and the like. Also because, he asserts, Mr. Roosevelt has been back of suits for libel against one or two of them, which have cost the defendants large sums of money to settle.

"The Pale" Extended.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 2.—Emperor Nicholas yesterday approved a resolution adopted by the Cabinet opening up new sections for the residence of Jews. Heretofore legal residence of Jews has been restricted to that section of the Polish provinces and the Ugraine delimited by the original Jewish segregation law and known as "The Pale." Imperial consent is now given to unrestricted residence of Jews in twelve districts in the Provinces of Vatebesk, Volhynia, Mohilev, Poltava and Kherson, and the town of Yekaterinodar, the capital of Kuban.

Shot at Wife and Son.

Ottawa, Nov. 2.—While in an ungovernable fit of temper, Joseph H. Pelletier, 62 Church street, wardrobe keeper in the Senate, fired two shots from a 32-calibre revolver at his son, Edgar, and his wife, yesterday afternoon, luckily missing both of them. The police were immediately notified, and found the old man calmly eating his dinner, as if nothing out of the ordinary had happened. He was at once taken into custody.

A New Record.

Montreal, Nov. 2.—The Canadian Northern Steamship Co. yesterday announced that the Royal Edward, reported at Point Amour at 5.30 Monday night, has made a record-breaking run. She left Bristol at 6 p.m. last Thursday and will tie up at the Quebec dock early to-day, barring accidents. The Royal Edward thus beats her own previous record by four hours, while it shatters the records of all competitors by at least eight hours.

RUMOUR OF A REVOLT

Premier of Spain In Speech a Couple of Weeks Ago Denied the Probability of Any Rising Such as That In Portugal—Republicans Were Too Well Treated, He Said—Details From Capital Are Meagre.

London, Nov. 2. A despatch from Paris to The Daily Telegraph says a rumor is current that a revolution has broken out in Madrid.

No confirmation of this rumor has reached London.

While the suddenness with which the revolution in Portugal became an accomplished fact, would attach more credence to the above despatch than it might otherwise receive, still there does not seem to be any substantial reasons for expecting an upheaval in Spain just now.

Less than a fortnight ago, Senor Jose Canalejas, Premier of Spain, interviewed by a special correspondent of The London Chronicle, who was fresh from Lisbon and the scenes of the revolt, said:

"I will answer with my head that events in Lisbon are not repeated in Madrid, or in any other part of Spain." He emphasized his words by tapping his heel on the ground.

"The late Portuguese Government must have been living in a fool's paradise! Everyone outside Portugal appears to have known what was about to happen. We, in Spain, were not surprised at the upheaval, but we did not look for it so soon."

"No, I do not think that the republican success in Portugal will have any repercussion in Spain. We tolerate republicans. They have a perfect right to freedom of speech and liberty of action so long as these are legal and constitutional.

"You ask me if the republicans have succeeded in undermining the loyalty of the army, as they did in Portugal. My answer is, emphatically no. The day they attempt it they will pay the penalty prescribed by the existing law of the land."

Discussing his reform program, Senor Canalejas declared that the present Government would do its best to carry it through the Cortes. The Government, he declared, had put its shoulder to the wheel of reform, and would not be deterred in its task either by the thunders of the church on the one hand or by the fury of revolutionary socialists on the other hand.

RUMOUR OF A THIRD PARTY

Latest Political Gossip In Ottawa Says That Certain Protestants Are Planning to Organize a Political Group and News Has Leaked Out Prematurely — Hon. Mr. Sifton's Name Mentioned as Leader.

Ottawa, Nov. 2.—It leaked out yesterday that there is a proposal on foot to establish a new political party in Canada, which will represent the Protestant people of the Dominion.

The mainspring of the idea is stated to be in the Province of Quebec, and that it is gaining strength, because of the determined attitude towards Roman Catholicism assumed by the Protestant clergy of the province, since the recent eucharistic congress in Montreal taught them without a shadow of a doubt that the last stand of the Church of Rome would be in Canada, and that it would be a fight to a finish.

Reports reaching here are to the effect that the weekly appeals of the Protestant clergy to their adherents to be up and doing are having a strong influence. The present Government, on the one hand, and the Nationalists on the other, have shown them that they can expect no quarter. The recent influx of Roman Catholic clergy from France has made the situation more acute, and the statistics of the census are awaited with anxiety.

It is stated that during the next session of Parliament the new party will be organized, and that it will include men of prominence on both sides of the House. Hon. Clifford Sifton's name is mentioned as one of those likely to be at the head of the new party. It is well known that he has not been on the best terms with the Government for some years, and it will be remembered that he resigned his portfolio because of the autonomy bill. However, there are political developments pending which may upset this scheme. The Drummond-Arthabasca election may or may not clear the air a little.

Woke Them Up.

Ottawa, Nov. 2.—Since the Eucharistic Congress in Montreal there has been greater vitality shown by the Protestant Churches of Ottawa. The Presbyterians, hitherto somewhat cold regarding the question of church union, have warmed to the subject, and a special meeting of the presbytery has been called for Dec. 6 to discuss it.

Worked in Lunch Hour; Caused Strike

St. John, N.B., Nov. 2.—The Hassam Paving Co. of Worcester, Mass., which has an extensive contract here for permanent street paving, had a miniature strike on its hands.

Included in the number of men who are engaged in laying brick for catch basins in the street are two members of a Lowell union. These men, being particularly expert in that line, were engaged at $6 per day. One day this week they worked during their lunch hour in order to finish a particular piece of work. The local union fined them $25 a piece, and, because the company would not enforce the payment of the fine, the strike was declared.

Alienated Wife's Affections.

Walkerton, Nov. 2.—A suit for alienation of his wife's affections brought by Wm. Macdonald, a farmer near Paisley, against Malcolm Macdonald, a neighbor, was settled out of court by a payment of $1000 damages.

You owe it to your own best judgment to try Psychine (pronounced Si-keen). We'll gladly buy a 50-cent bottle from your druggist and give it to you free to try.

You know the "know-it-alls." Suspicious of everybody and everything.

They promised well at one time in their career, then they seemed to come to a full stop.

Just because of that unhappy distrust, that suspicion that won for them the same attitude in return, that made every one distrust and dislike them.

Now you're not a "know-it-all." Only about one per cent. of the people are.

We feel sure that you have an open receptive mind—one that is anxious to learn more, to advance.

And to you we say that you owe it to your own best judgment to try Psychine.

* * *

Every now and then we come to a certain epoch in medicine when we think advance or improvement impossible.

Then some one comes along and the whole school of medicine is overturned, new and apparently indisputable theories, all good, all progressive.

In the progress of medicine we sometimes discover new values in old things.

One of these is in the efficacy of certain herbs to cure disease.

And the reason they cure is that they increase and strengthen the white corpuscles of the blood—the Phagocytes—the scavengers of the body, devouring every germ of disease that gains entrance to the body.

A third of a century ago, Psychine was compounded of certain herbs.

Since that time it has cured hundreds of thousands.

And all because it contained those herbs that science now knows builds up and strengthens the white corpuscles of the blood—the Phagocytes.

* * *

If you have any of these ailments don't be a "know-it-all," it won't pay you.

CAMPAIGN AT A CLOSE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

ARTHABASKA, QUE., NOV. 2—With a meeting in Victoriaville this afternoon and another here to-night, the campaign in connection with the bye-election here to-morrow, will come to a close. Crowds flocked into these places to-day to hear the final outbursts of oratory. The French Canadians will make to-day and to-morrow a great holiday. Sir Wilfrid will not be here for the meetings, notwithstanding the reports. It is no secret that the opposition to the naval policy on all sides here is very intense, but to an impartial observer it does not seem quite strong enough to overcome the Premier's personal popularity, or the influence of the Liberal candidate. The impassioned Nationalists continue the bitter talking against England and English influence in Canada.

STUDENTS WERE ALLOWED TO GO

Special to The Examiner.

GUELPH, NOV. 2.—Riotous Agricultural College students, who did a lot of damage on Hallowe'en and let bags flow down on theatre performances, were let go with a warning by the Magistrate this morning. They agreed to pay all damage.

WASH THAT ITCH AWAY

It is said that there are certain springs in Europe that give relief and cure to Eczema and other skin diseases. If you knew that by washing in these waters you could be relieved from that awful itch wouldn't you make every effort to take a trip to Europe at once? Would you not be willing to spend your last cent to find the cure?

But you need not leave home for these distant springs. Relief is right here in your own home town.

A simple wash of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol and other ingredients as compounded in D.D.D. Prescription will bring instant relief to that terrible burning itch, and leave the skin as smooth and healthy as that of a child.

If you have not already tried it, write the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. P.E., 49 Colborne street, Toronto, for a free trial bottle, and prove its wonderful effectiveness. We assure you of instant relief. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

BOARD'S APPRECIATION OF LATE JAS. STEVENSON

The following resolution of sympathy was moved by Dr. Burpham and seconded by Col. Miller and unanimously passed at the regular meeting of the Board of Education last evening.

"That the Peterborough Board of Education deeply lament the death of Mr. James Stevenson, who was a member of the Board for a period extending over fifty-five years, which is, we believe, unprecedented.

Mr. Stevenson gave to the Board his valuable time and his best services.

We enter our tribute to his work worth upon our minutes, and unite in tendering to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy."

ALL THE NEWS ALL THE TIME

Peterborough In Pro. League? Forget It, Evangeline

GUELPH, Nov. 1.—The fact that Ontario's professional hockey league with an eastern and western division is being organized, was learned here this morning. The well-founded report states that there are to be two divisions, with four teams in each. The western Ontario division will have Guelph, Berlin, Waterloo, and Brantford, and the eastern division will include Peterborough, Belleville, Picton and Port Hope. The organization of this league is said to be already under way, and arrangements for a meeting to elect officers are being made. The idea in having the two divisions is to spread the interest over a larger portion of the Province and the pro-championship of Ontario can be decided by the winner of the two divisions playing off.

In Guelph the Rink Company will finance the team, with Jimmy Cockman, the Lincoln, Neb., thirdbaseman who is home for the winter, acting as manager.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE O. H. A. ON NOVEMBER 19th

The annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association will be held in the Temple building, Toronto, on Saturday, November 19, at 9 a.m.

Only one session will be held, and it is expected to complete all the business before noon, so that the delegates may have time to get lunch and attend the football match in the afternoon. Each club whose fees are paid for the coming season is entitled to representation by one delegate, exclusive of the members of the Executive of the Association, and the dllegation must be a member of the club he represents.

Nominations for office must be in the hands of the Secretary by Saturday, November 12. Officers to be elected are President, First and Second Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Treasurer and four committeemen.

Mr. Louis Blake Duff of Welland, will likely be re-elected President, without opposition. No opposition to Mr. H. E. Wettlaufer of Berlin for the First Vice-Presidency and Mr. Chas. Farquharson of Stratford for the Second Vice-Presidency, to Mr. Francis Nelson as C. A. A. U. Governor, or to the present Secretary and Treasurer, is anticipated.

The annual subscription for each team entered is $6, and the entrance fee $5, making $11 in all for a new team. Clubs desiring admission are requested to forward their fees at once.

Notice of amendments to the constitution of the association or the rules of the game must be in the hands of the Secretary, W. A. Hewitt, Daily Star office, Toronto, on or before Saturday, Nov. 5.

ALFIE SHRUBB WILL TRY TO COME BACK NOW

NEW YORK, NOV. 1.—Alfred Shrubb, the little English professional runner, has completely recovered from the injury to his leg, and is planning a busy winter campaign after the twenty-mile international team race, which is to be held at Madison Square Garden next Friday night, but could not securfe for a partner an Englishman whom he thought was fast enough or possessed of sufficient staying qualities to go through such a gruelling contest.

Shrubb is coaching at Harvard now but has sent out a challenge to race any man in the world over a distance of ten, twelve or fifteen miles, winner take all. Both Hans Holmer, who is teamed with Bill Queal in Friday night's vent, and Gusta Ljungstrom, who has John Svanberg for a partner, say they will take up Shrubb's defy should they succeed in carrying off first honours in the coming race.

Shrubb says he will be at the trackside Friday night ready to challenge either or both men in the winning team. The race will start with six combinations entered, representing as many nationalities, as follows: Holmer-Queal, America; Meadows, Wood, Canada; St. Yves-Larque, of France; Ljungstrom-Svanberg, Sweden; Majori-Vanbra, Italy, and Kolhemainen, Nieminen, Finland.

Chemong Athletic Club Has A Good Record

They won three games from Bridgenorth, two from Lakefield one from Chemong Park, one from Rama, and one fro Longford, and lost one to Chemong Park.

Weather Predictions For November By Prof. Hicks

Following are Professor Irl Hicks' weather predictions for the month of November as given in Word and Works:

A Reactionary Storm Period falls on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd, being near the centre of the Mercury equinox, in the Venus period, and at New Moon at an eclipse node. The month will come in with menacing conditions—rising temperature, falling barometer and positive storm areas moving rapidly from west to east. Heavy autumnal storms should not surprise the student of these forecasts the first three to four days of November. Rain and thunder storms will turn to sleet and snow northward, and high, cold gales will come from the northwest as the barometer rises behind the storms. These storms will bring discomfit and danger to navigators on the seas and lakes. The last three days of October, up to November the 4th, central on the 1st, is one of the most positive seismic periods of the year. The Earth will not pass out of the seismic strain engendered at this period until after the opposition and eclipse of the Moon on the 16th.

A Regular Storm Period is central on the 8th, disturbance from the 6th to the 11th. The culmination of the Mercury period is at the crisis of this period. Moon is at extreme declination south and at first quarter. Storms of rain, snow, sleet and wind are indicated for this period, all followed by high barometer, sweeping northwest gales and very cold for the season. Only the foolhardy will despise storm possibilities and indications, and venture on the lakes at this time.

A Reactionary Storm Period covers the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th. The fact sthat the Moon is on the celestial equator on the 13th, and both full and in the perigree on the 16th, indicate that decided storm conditions will begin at the beginning, and continue to be end of this period. Thunder, wind and rain will begin in the west on and touching the 13th. Low barometer will attend these storms as they progress from east to west. The culmination will come on and touching the 16th, when change to rising barometer, northwesterly gales and possibly a November blizzard will set in from the northwest. All coast regions and cities specially exposed to high tides, or tidal waves, should be reminded of possible danger on and near Wednesday, November the 16th. That date is also the centre of the most decided seismic period of the year, extending three to four days before and after the 16th. On that date falls the Full Moon at an eclipse node, causing a total eclipse of the Moon, and hence bringing Earth, Moon and Sun on a direct line with each other. According to the calculations of this "storm prophet," Earth, air and seas will undergo an astronomic strain that will be heard from at this time. See if the whole tribe of palpitarizing prophets don't go forecasting seismic trouble when they read this prediction.

A Regular Storm Period is central on the 19th, covering the 17th to 22nd. The indications are that little intermission of fair weather will appear between this and the preceding storm period. This will likely cause a prolonged spell of threatening weather, increasing into renewed storms of rain and snow on and touching the 19th, 20th and 21st. On the heels of these storms the barometer will rise and change to much colder with high gales, will come out of the northwest.

A Reactionary Storm Period is central on the 23rd, 24th, 25th and 26th. This period will culminate on and touching the 25th and 26th. Moon being on the celestial equator on the 26th. Low barometer, higher temperature with possible lightning, thunder and rain, on the 26th. Rising barometer and change to colder will come promptly behind the storms. The month goes out at the oncoming of a regular storm period, with Moon in apogee on the 30th, and New Moon on December 1st. Falling barometer, rising temperature and increasing cloudiness will appear in the west by the 30th, bringing on that section rain and snow by December 1st. The 28th to 30th are in a seismic period.

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:
"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, worn an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

A representative of the Examiner called on one of Dr E. L. Although in some of the cases the system employed by Dr. Rivenburg was only in operation with the patient since Sunday last, it looks as if the Doctor has an excellent method of treating all impediments of the speech and any one in the city affected in this manner should consult him at the Oriental Hotel, where he will be for the next few weeks.

THEY WILL ASK TO HAVE THE FIRE DEPARTMENT PUT UNDER COMMISSION

Matter Was Introduced by Fire Chief Howard at Provincial Fire Chiefs' Association—Chief Howard Gives Interesting Paper.

KEEPING CITIES CLEAN

Chief W. A. Howard returned last night from Toronto, where was in attendance at the convention of the Provincial Association of Fire Chiefs. The sessions were well attended and highly interesting and instructive. Chief Howard contributed to the programme a paper, which was followed by a long and profitable discussion.

Chief Howard's paper was as follows:

To the President and Members of the Provincial Association of Fire Chiefs:—

Gentlemen,—I am pleased to have the honour of being assigned topic 2, "The advantages of a clean town or city, from a fire standpoint, and how to accompaish the same."

The dangerous habit of carelessly permitting the accumulation of combustible rubbish to my mind, is nothing short of criminal negligence. And while we as Fire Chiefs, realize the seriousness of this practice, I fear the general public do not understand that when they are careless in this matter of allowing combustible rubbish to accumulate in and about their premises, they are not only endangering their own property, but they are endangering the lives and property of their neighbours.

A great many serious fires occur during each year that can be traced home to this particular cause, and I think it is the duty of the members of this Association to take up a regular campaign to fight this evil. And I would respectfully suggest that those of us who have not suitable bylaws regulating this sort of thing, take the matter up with your respective boards, so that in conducting a sincere and earnest campaign against this evil, that will eventually have the affect of decreasing the number of fires from this cause to a very considerable extent, you may have the assistance of your police departments to enforce the measure upon persons who may be obstinate.

It is desirable that the most cordial and friendly relations exist between the members of the Police and Fire Departments. If the heads of these two Departments work in harmony, in all likelihood the firemen and policemen will render valuable assistance to each other, in the performance of their duties.

I learn from the public press that some of you conduct a regular systematic tour of inspection of our business houses, which to my mind is a capital idea, and should be productive of much good. The very fact of the Chief of the Fire Department, or say one of his Deputies, in uniform making periodical visits through the business districts not only has the effect of enlisting the co-operation of the business men ,but also acts as a warning to employees who at times grow careless by smoking, etc., which so often endangers the property of their employers. The note of the warning on the part of the person making these inspections should be given in a friendly manner and should be accepted in the same spirit. I have made a practice of conducting these inspections ever since my appointment to office and I have never had occasion to summons any person to the police court. Whenever I find persons persistently and wilfully careless I notify the Chief of Police. The Chief Constable will in turn send a written notice to the offender giving him say forty-eight hours to clean up, and in every instance this has had the desired effect.

Those of you who have not already adopted such a plan, I hope will give the subject some consideration. The number of fires occuring in each year from defective electric wiring is almost appalling, and sometimes a hint thrown out by the Chief of the Department or his Deputy while making an inspection will have the effect of making your merchants and manufacturers take the necessary precautions along this line to safeguard their property.

Respectfully yours,
W. A. HOWARD,
Chief Fire Dept., Peterborough.

The following important motion was introduced by Chief Howard and seconded by Chief Keys, of Galt:—That this Association send a deputation to meet the ministers of the Government with a view to have the government pass an act to compel every municipality in Canada to set aside a given portion of the tax rate for the maintenance of the fire department and with the consent of a majority of the representative municipalities to place every fire department under a commission.

The motion was considered of too serious a nature to be settled off-hand, but was finally disposed of by appointing a special committee to go into the matter thoroughly and bring in some recommendation at the next meeting.

TORONTO, NOV. 3.—James E. COBALT, NOV. 3.—Largely on the basis of a story told them by a Sturgeon Falls fortune teller, two French Canadian miners formed a company, sold stock, and put in their own savings, securing in all nearly a thousand dollars, and sunk a shaft through solid granite, expecting to find gold. There was nothing but granite, and the dissatisfied shareholders are now clamoring for their money back.

KNOW THE QUALITY

How are you to tell the quality of gold in the frames or eyeglass mounts you are buying? This is a mighty important thing to be able to do. Can you do it?

Yes, there is one sure way. See that the name "FOWLER" is stamped on the bridge of the frame or eyeglass mount you buy.

Tags? Yes, there are tags on our goods that are a guarantee, but we go a step farther in stamping the name "FOWLER" on the bridge, which means that we know that the frame or mounting bearing our monogram is made specially for us, and contains a standard quality and quantity of gold, and is positively guaranteed by us. We will replace the goods or refund you the money paid, if the frame or mounting does not prove satisfactory. You should look well to your own protection in buying Glasses.

TOO WAYS TO ONE EVIL END.

There are two forces (if that is not too respectable a term) at work in Canada to-day that threaten untold injury to national well-being. The separation of Canada from the Empire would be a calamity, but the separation of the people of Canada from each other would be a double calamity, for it would not only tend to bring about the weakening, or the severance of the imperial tie, but would divide the people of Canada into hostile camps, generate friction, arouse a squabbling spirit that would divert the public mind from serious consideration of the problems of national upbuilding and infuse a paralysing influence into the whole national life. We Canadians have serious work to do, gigantic problems to solve, and require all the energies of an undivided, of a united citizenship. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has spent his whole public life in preaching the doctrine and practice of Canadian unity of citizenship, of oneness of aim and effort. He has in this followed the example of Sir John Macdonald, Sir George Cartier and other great Canadian statesmen. Is all their work to count for nothing? Is it to be undone by a faction of firebrands in Quebec, called "Nationalists," and their co-workers, in unholy alliance in Ontario and some of the other provinces?

The Nationalists of Quebec, with their narrow provincialism, with their disentegrating, with their segregating, ambitions, with their outspoken hostility to imperial connection, and their allies in Ontario, of similar sinister brand, are doing an evil work in Canada. They are conducting their campaign from opposite points of view, from opposite points of attack, but their object is the same; will if, unfortunately, it should be reached, be the same in result — the destruction of national harmony and the train of evils that will flow from such a condition. The immediate, common object, the first result sought is to justify anything to beat Laurier, and to this end he is attacked from both sides.

The Nationalists condemn him because he too British, too great a worker for a united Empire and a united Canada. His Ontario enemies denounce him because he is a great political force, because he is a stumbling block in the way of the success of their petty partizan ambitions. The Nationalists attack Laurier because he is responsible for the Canadian naval policy, the Ontario fire-brands seek to scorch him because his naval policy, according to their claims, does not go far enough, because, as they claim, it is disloyal, and that it will lead to Imperial separation. One faction says Laurier is to be destroyed because his naval policy welds the shackles of British connection upon the feet of the slaves he seeks to make of Canadians; the Ontario faction says Laurier is to be destroyed because his naval policy means separation from the Empire. Both factions dig with different feet, but both are working together, hollowing the same grave. There is a section of the great Conservative party that delights in promoting the work of the Nationalists, whose work is the disintegration of the Empire. The Quebec leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Monk, the most prominent senatorial member of the Conservative party, Senator Landry, and Dr. Paquet, are giving official sanction to the cooperation of the Conservative party, or a faction of that party. We have Conservative journals in Ontario praying that the anti-imperial candidate might win in Drummond and Arthabaska; and that the Laurier candidate might be defeated; and Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative by his silence, stands by consenting, holding the coats of the Nationalists, in imitation, of Saul of Tarsus, at St. Stephen's martyrdom.

If the Ontario factionists and their Nationalist allies in Quebec win in Drummond and Arthabaska, it will not be a thousandth part as great a blow to Sir Wilfrid Laurier as it will portend to Canada, to Canadian peace and harmony, the absolutely essential condition of Canadian progress, of national growth and the maintenance of this country in the foremost place it now occupies in the outer circle of the empire.

We have all through Ontario, coteries of small-minded Canadians, who are seeking to destroy Laurier, and what Laurier stands for—national growth—who work hand in glove with the French-Canadian radical Nationalists. Though they smite him for opposite reasons—one because he is too British, the other because he is not British enough—they are working for the same end; one perhaps to gain a sentimental advantage, the other for more sordid reasons—to gain a little petty party advantage, or satisfy a small, personal ambition; but both are sowing the dragon's teeth of strife, both doing an inestimable injury to the welfare of Canada. They are two evils of which there is no lesser, because they are one, working in different ways, to the same end, and that end, evil, only evil, and that continually.

IS CANADA LOSING GROUND?

In this age of progress in every department of human activity the country or individual that does not advance, naturally falls behind. We Canadians have long been proud of our supremacy as a cheese producing and exporting country; but the statistics compiled by the Department of Trade and Commerce, indicate that Canada's lead in cheese is challenged. In 1906 Canada exported cheese to the value of $24,300,000. In 1909 the figures had dropped to $20,200,000. Last year this marked recession of nearly four million dollars was overcome, the figures being $21,400,000. This variation in value of our export output of cheese may be, in part, due to seasonal reasons, and in part, due to larger absorption by the home market, which it is often remarked, does not consume as much cheese as would be consumed, if, as some claim, the pink of cheese were not selected for export, with practically the culls thrown on the home market. Other reasons given, and they are more serious, are the deterioration in quality of Canadian cheese, and the increased supply from other countries, from New Zealand, Denmark, and Holland. Upon this point the Canadian Trade Commissioner at Bristol, England, says in his last report to the Department at Ottawa:

"There is very little demand this season for the fodder-made cheese, and likely to be less in future seasons, owing to the increased popularity of the New Zealand article. Nor is the quality as good as last year, the best description of Canadian being loose in make and the shrinkage on fresh-landed parcels abnormal. Allowance by Canadian factorymen do not compare favourably with allowances by New Zealand factories. Less coloured cheese is coming to this port every season. Not so much complaint is heard about colour flying in stored lots. A noticeable feature is the growing popularity of New Zealand cheese as instanced by the absorption of some 6,000 tons over the previous season without any marked fall in prices. There is only a normal consumptive demand for Canadian cheese this season in spite of the high prices ruling in other departments of the trade.

This is something to set the Canadian farmer, cheese maker and cheese exporter thinking, and—acting. It is well known that the British market is a good market, that good wares bring good prices, but one thing will be insisted upon; the quality must be good, even prime. If there is a falling off in quality, due to inferior quality of milk and lack of care in its management, or to carelessness in manufacturing, boxing, or shipping, all the interests concerned are called upon to increased watchfulness and reform in these regards. The Dominion Government seems to be doing its share to help the farmers in the production of the best quality and largest quantity of milk, to assist manufacturers in producing cheese of the highest quality and in helping shippers to deliver their cheese in the British market in the best condition. But Governments cannot do all. Those concerned must do their share, and their share consists in keeping abreast of progress in dairying methods at all stages, from the grass in the pasture to the grocers' shelves. There must be no slipshod methods in the production of an article of diet. The quality must be gilt-edged, and the methods of boxing, shipping and care must be stringently honest. With an honest article and honest methods of boxing grading and shipment there need be no fear of Canada losing its grip on the British market.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Despatches report an epidemic of virulent smallpox in Michigan. About twenty persons have died in and in the vicinity of, Saginaw, and about twice that number are, it is feared, fatally ill with the disease. The Mayor has ordered the closing of churches, schools, theatres, and other meeting places. Michigan is very close to Ontario, and Dr. Bell will have to keep a strict watch.

Mr. Plummer, President of the Dominion Steel Company, has good business common sense. He says that everything is most satisfactory in connection with the steel and coal companies. "Of course we feel the passing of the steel bounties, but we have reduced costs—about as fast as the bounties have gone down. It is good business sanity to adopt the spirit of the Spanish proverb, "if we cannot have what we like, let us like what we have"—make the most and best of our opportunities and facilities.

Nationalists And Some Conservatives Willing To Do Anything To Beat Laurier

(Montreal Herald)

There is something very instructive about the answers received to The Herald's telegraphed enquiry to Conservative leaders, "How do you advise Conservatives to vote in the Arthabaska election?" But let it be added that there is a significance about the failure of others to answer.

Let us take the case of Mr. Foster first. As was pointed out after Mr. Bourassa's meeting, there have been three renderings of what happened at the series of conferences in London attended by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The first was spoken by Mr. Foster, shortly after the opening of the last session of Parliament. Beginning at 1897, Mr. Foster took out of the report every reference to defence, military or naval, made by any one at any conference, and always he put Laurier in the limelight as the one who had contested the movement towards military and naval unification, and who had in the end rejected Great Britain's demands. The second recital was Sir Wilfrid's own. He developed the thesis that when participation in naval enterprise was first proposed he rejected the idea of contribution, in ships, men or money, to the navy of Great Britain, and after mature reflection elected for the development of Canada's own naval resources; and that when the time came that it could be done, Canada having the means, and should be done, Great Britain having withdrawn from our ports and seas, the foundations of a Canadian navy were laid. The third recital was that of Mr. Bourassa, who claimed that all the time Sir Wilfrid was fooling the people of Quebec with a pretended resistance to demands to which he always intended to accede; that he has now acceded to the demands successively made; and that he has surrendered the autonomy of the Dominion.

And now Mr. Foster asks the Conservatives to vote for the Bourassa candidate. They are as the poles apart in the essential of the controversy. One says Laurier has betrayed England by doing too little; the other says Laurier has betrayed Canada by doing too much. But they are to find common ground, for the moment, in making difficulty for Laurier. Isn't it sublimely simple?

If this attitude is at all typical of the feeling of the run of Conservatives, it can have only one meaning, namely, that they are prepared for all the irrepressible conflict of their own opinions, to join in voting against the Canadian navy for the sake of injuring Laurier. Vote against the navy as anti-British if you will; vote against it as anti-Canadian if you will; so long as you vote against it and put Laurier out, never mind what the future has in store. That, it seems to us it can fairly be claimed, is the deduction from the advice of Mr. Foster, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Barker, to vote for the Nationalist candidate.

To what extent, one wonders, are the members of the Conservative party, plain citizens, good Canadians, lovers of straight dealing, ready to endorse this plan of action?

Possibly the silence of the others appealed to by The Herald may serve as an indication. Sir James Whitney is silent. Mr. Roblin is silent, although, in this as in all else, Mr. Rogers probably speaks his mind. Mr. Hazen is silent. There is no word from Mr. Haultain. There is no word from Mr. Borden to The Herald or to the electors, although Mr. McBride shows how ludicrous it is for a leader of Opposition to behave in this way by counselling his friends to follow the advice of Mr. Borden. Mr. McBride, slated by many for the position himself, evidently thinks it is the business of the leader of the Conservative party to lead it. Mr. Borden prefers to leave it, and truth to tell, it does not seem to miss him very much.

So after the voting is over, where are the new found allies to stand towards each other? Are the advocates of contribution going to surrender to Mr. Bourassa? Or is Mr. Bourassa going to join hands with the advocates of contribution? The thing cannot go on forever on the basis laid down with such delightful, cynical frankness by Mr. Barker, who condemns the sentiments expressed by Mr. Bourassa but wishes him success in his effort to destroy Laurier. Mr. Barker would still condemn Mr. Bourassa's sentiments after the destruction of Laurier had been wrought, and would pay precious little attention to his demands for recognition. So would Dr. Sproule, who is honest enough not to line up with Mr. Foster. So would Mr. Hazen. So would Sir James Whitney. So would every advocate of contribution, every sneerer at autonomy.

And yet, let us do Mr. Foster, Mr. Barker and Mr. Rogers the justice to see that they are at least open about expressing their willingness to accept Mr. Bourassa's help. There are others who would take it as willingly, but who will not say so. And there are others who have not two opinions in common with Mr. Bourassa, and neither will they, say so. It isn't only in the Liberal party that the party spirit runs strong. Fancy the men who sent Mr. Monk to Coventry standing by to snatch for themselves the fruits of his labors.

COMPOSED 40,000 PRAYERS

GOLDFRIGE, ME., November 3.—Known throughout this section of Maine as "The Praying Woman of Aroostood," Mrs. Rufina M Osgood has composed 40,000 prayers and can repeat every one of them from memory. She has taught fifty-four terms of common school, surrounding towns for years bidding for her services, so her wages were often raised two and three times more than the average.

Twice she has accumulated $3,200 in the bank for the purpose of going through college, but each time she was prevented through sickness or death in her family. She finally entered the Western Normal School in 1901 and graduated in 1908.

Since she joined the Baptist Church in early life each one of her 40,000 prayers, she says, has been answered and she can repeat each by heart. She has composed over 200 sacred poems.

Winchester, Ind.—"Four doctors told me that they could never make me regular, and that I would eventually have dropsy. I would bloat, and suffer from bearing down pains, cramps and chills, and I could not sleep nights. My mother wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking one and one half bottles of the Compound, I am all right again, and I recommend it to every suffering woman."—Mrs. MAY DEAL, Winchester, Ind.

Hundreds of such letters from girls and mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them have been received by The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by its use.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"I know nothing whatever of these matters," I answered, "but from what I have seen of your father I should imagine that he is remarkably able to guard his own interests."

Blenavon nodded.

"I suppose that is true," he admitted. "But when he is already a rich man, with very simple tastes, I am rather surprised that he should care to meddle with such things."

"Playing at commerce," I remarked, "has become rather a hobby with men of leisure lately."

"And women, too," Blenavon assented. "Rather an ugly hobby, I call it."

A servant entered and addressed Blenavon.

"The carriage is at your door, your Lordship," he announced.

Blenavon glanced at his watch and rose.

"I shall have to ask you to excuse me, Ducaine," he said. "I was to have dined out to-night, and I must go and make my peace. Another glass of wine?"

"Nothing more, thank you," I said. "I will just say good-night to your sister."

"She's probably in the drawing-room," he remarked. 'If not, I will make your excuses when I see her."

Blenavon hurried out. A few moments later I heard the wheels of his carriage pass the long front of the house and turn down the avenue. I lingered for a moment where I was. The small oak table at which we had dined seemed like an oasis of colour in the midst of an atmosphere of gloom. The room was large and lofty, and the lighting was altogether inadequate. From the walls there frowned through the shadows the warlike faces of generations of Rowchesters. At the farther end of the apartment four armed giants stood grim and ghostlike in the twilight, which seemed to supply their empty frames with the presentment of actual warriors. I looked down upon the table, all agleam with flowers and fruit, and silver, over which shone the red glow of the shaded lamps. Exactly opposite me, in that chair now pushed carelessly back, she had sat, so close that my hand could have touched hers at any moment, so close that I had been able to wonder more than ever before at the marvellous whiteness of her skin, the perfection of her small, finely-shaped features, the strange sphinxlike expression of her face, always suggestive of some great self-restraint, mysterious, and subtly stimulating. And as I stood there she seemed again to be occupying the chair, at first a faint shadowy presence, but gaining with every second shape and outline, until I could scarcely persuade myself that it was not she who sat there, she whose eyes more than once during dinner-time had looked into mine with that curious and instinctive demand for sympathy, even as regards the things of the moment, the passing jest, the most transitory of emotions. A few minutes ago I had felt that I knew her better than ever before in my life, and now the chair was empty. My heart was beating at the imaginary presence of the vainest of shadows. She was going to marry Colonel Mostyn Ray.

And then I stood as though suddenly turned to stone. Before me were the great front windows of the castle. Beyond, eastwards, stretched the salt marshes, the salt marshes riven with creeks. Once more my unwilling hands touched that huddled-up heap of extinct humanity. I saw the dead white face, which the sun could never warm again, and I felt the hands, cold, clammy, horrible. Ray was a soldier, and life and death had become phrases to him; but I—it was the first dead man I had ever seen, and the horror of it was cold in my blood. Ray had murdered him, fought with him, perhaps, but killed him. What would she say if she knew? Would his hands be clean to her, or would the horror rise up like a red wall between them?

"Will you take coffee, sir?"

I set my teeth and turned slowly round. I even took the cup from the tray without spilling it.

"What liqueur may I bring you, sir?" the man asked.

"Brandy," I answered.

In a few minutes I was laughing at myself, not quite naturally, perhaps, but only I could know that. I was getting to be a morbid, nervous person. It was the solitude! I must get away from it all before long. Fate had been playing strange tricks with me. Life, which a few months ago had been a cold and barren thing, was suddenly pressed to my lips, a fantastic, intoxicating mixture. I had drawn enough poison into my veins. I would have no more. I swore it.

* * * * * * *

I tried to leave the castle unnoticed, but the place was alive with servants. One o fthem hurried up to me as I tried to reach my hat and coat.

"Her ladyship desired me to say that she was in the billiard-room, sir," he announced.

"Will you tell Lady Angela—" and then I stopped. The door of the billiard-room was open, and Lady Angela stood there the outline of her figure sharply defined against a flood of light. She had a cue in her hand and she looked across at me.

"You are a long time, Mr. Ducaine. I am waiting for you to give me a lesson at billiards."

I crossed the hall to her side.

"I thought that as Lord Blenavon had gone out—"

She shrugged her shoulders.

"That you would evade your duty, which is clearly to stay and entertain your hostess."

She closed the door and glanced at me curiously.

"What has happened to you?" she asked. "You look as though you had been with ghosts."

"Is it so impossible?" I asked, moving a little nearer to the huge log fire. 'What company is more terrifying than the company of our dead thoughts and dead hopes and dead memories?"

"Really, I am afraid that Blenavon must have been a very depressing companion!" she said, leaning her elbow upon the broad mantelpiece.

It was absurd! I tried to shake myself free from the miseries of the last hour.

"I am afraid it must have been the other way," I said, "for your brother has gone out."

"Yes," she said quietly, "he has gone to that woman at Braster Grange. I wish I knew what brought her into this part of the country."

I looked round at the billiard-table.

"Did you mean that you would like a game?" I asked. "I am rather out of practice, but I used to fancy myself a little."

"I have no doubt," she answered, sinking into a low chair, "that you are an excellent player, but I am willing to take it for granted. I do not wish to play billiards. Draw that chair up to the fire and talk to me."

It was of all things what I wished to avoid that night. But there was no escape. I obeyed her.

"What your brother has told me is, I presume, no secret," I said. "I am to wish you happiness, am I not?"

She looked at me in quick surprise.

"Did Blenavon tell you—"

"That you had promised to marry Colonel Mostyn Ray. Yes."

"That is very strange," she said thoughtfully. 'Blenavon is not as a rule needlessly communicative and at present it is almost a secret."

"Nevertheless," I said, turning slowly towards her, "I presume that it is true."

"It is perfectly true," she answered.

There was silence between us for several minutes. One of the footmen came softly in to see whether we required a marker, and finding us talking, withdrew. I was determined that the onus of further speech should remain with her.

"You are surprised?" she asked at last.

"Very."

"And why?"

"I scarcely know," I answered, "except that I never associated the thought of marriage with Colonel Ray, and he is very much older than you."

"Yes, he is a great deal older," she answered. "I think that his history has been rather a sad one. He was in love for many years with a woman who married—some one else. I have always felt sorry for him ever since I was a little girl."

"Do you know who that woman was?"

"I have never heard her name," she answered.

I found courage to lift my eyes and look at her.

"May I ask when you are going to be married?"

Her eyes fell. The question did not seem to please her.

"I do not know," she said. "We have not spoken of that yet. Everything is very vague."

"Colonel Ray is coming down here, of course?" I remarked.

"Not to my knowledge," she declared. "Not at any rate until the next meeting of the Council. I shall be back in town before then."

"I begin to believe," I said, with a grim smile, "that your brother was right."

"My brother right?"

A Mother's Sacrifice

Made in Kindness is Often an Injustice to Herself and to Her Family.

It is a common thing for mothers to sacrifice comfort, strength and sometimes life itself, for her family. So common, indeed, that little notice is taken of it.

If anyone else is tired or weak or sick, mother waits on them. But there is no time for mother to be sick or to get the much-needed rest. So she neglects her ailments until she gets beyond the reach of human aid.

This is an injustice to herself and to her family. Health must be preserved. It is a mother's duty to herself and to those about her.

COURT OF REVISION HELD A MEETING

A meeting of the Court of Revision was held last evening at which there were present, Messrs. W. Langford, chairman, B. Morrow and W. F. Johnston.

The meeting was held in accordance with notices published and transmitted to consider the special assessments for sewers, proposed to be constructed as recommended by the Board of Health on Inverlea street from Water street east to the manhole opposite the laneway, and on Smith street from 100 feet west of George street to Benson street.

J. F. Crowley was heard and objected that he did not need the sewer on Inverlea street, and was assessed for other sewers. Appeal dismissed and assessment confirmed.

A letter was read from J. C. Brown saying he did not want the sewer on Smith street, and did not think he should be assessed for it. Appeal dismissed and assessmetn confirmed.

The assessments for the proposed sewers on the said parts of Inverlea street and Smith street, were passed and confirmed.

Several applications regarding taxes for 1910 were then taken up and dealt with.

"FLETCHERISM"

The habit of chewing one's food until it becomes almost liquefied and swallowed involuntarily, and eating certain foods at certain times of the day is called "Fletcherism" after a man named Fletcher who advocates this method as a remedy for indigestion and stomach troubles. While one may get from this system the maximum amount of strength from the minimum amount of food, it is a question as to what extent this principle of living can be applied to the human race as a whole. It is an old and true saying, "What is one man's meat is another man's poison."

There is one thing sure, however, much less distress and much more assimilation of the body-building elements contained in every day food would be experienced by people with poor or impaired digestion if they would only believe what we tell them about Vinol.

There is no mystery about it, or misrepresentation. Vinol simply contains the necessary elements needed to reestablish a normal condition of the digestive system. There is no need of going into the scientific reasons why—it simply does it, that is all.

Thousands of genuine testimonials from reliable people prove this claim, prove to further support the fact and we our faith in what we say, we unhesitatingly declare that any one who will buy a bottle of Vinol for stomach disorder and malassimilation, will have their money returned without question if they are not satisfied that it has done them good. BOSS OF 225,000 MINDS WHEN TOLD

Special to The Examiner:

GARY, IND., NOV. 3.—Residents of Gary, who had gathered in Jefferson Park to get a glimpse of Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, as he inspected the park, were much surprised to see the man who is boss of 25,000 men take orders from a woman, and obey them. That woman was his wife. The steel magnate, after whom the city is named, wished to get out of the automobile in which he was riding to take a walk through the park with Captain Norton, resident property chief of the corporation.

"Elbert, you are not feeling well," the bystanders heard Mrs. Gary say, "you will stay right in here," and Elbert stayed.

Judge Gary came to the city with the members of the American Iron and Steel Institute, of which he is president, and their European guests. The party came in a special train and on board were President Corey of the United States Steel Corporation, other American steel makers and high officials of German, English and Continental steel companies.

The party inspected the Gary steel plant under the guidance of General Superintendent W. P. Gleason, and took an automobile ride through the model city.

WEDS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW

Special to the Examiner.

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, OHIO, NOV. 3.—The culmination of an unusual romance was the marriage here of William Davis, aged sixty-nine, of Morristown, Ohio, and Mrs. Anna Davis, aged thirty-nine, of the same place. The disparity of ages is but a minor one of the interesting circumstances connected with the union, as the bride was the daughter-in-law and later the housekeeper of the man who is now her husband.

A number of years ago the son of the groom was united in marriage with the woman just led to the altar by her husband's father. Mr. Davis, Jr., died, and for a few years his widow had been acting as housekeeper for the father.

RICH IN COMEDY, RICH IN COSTUMES — RICH IN SCENIC EQUIPMENT

Millionaire Corporal Was Absent From Duty And Was Reduced To Ranks

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, NOV. 3.—Albert J. Myer, who was known while a soldier at Fort Myer, Va., as the "millionaire corporal," has been reduced to the ranks for disobedience of orders and being absent from duty without leave. His term of enlistment will expire, his officers believe, without finding him any nearer to the realization of his ambition—a commission—than when he entered the army.

Myer's grandfather, the late Brigadier-General Albert J. Myer, for whom Fort Myer was named, was conspicuous in the establishment of the United States Signal Corps and the Weather Bureau. Young Myer enlisted in Company G, of the Signal Corps, two years ago, determined to work his way to the top from the ranks. Last winter Myer created a stir in Washington, where his family connections gave him high social standing, by appearing at functions at which the commissioned officers at his post were guests.

Myer went away on a furlough early in the summer and remained over his time. Reporting at Fort Banks, Mass., he was ordered to return to Fort Myer. Failure to comply promptly led to arrest and conviction. He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of a private, be confined three months, and forfeit $50 of his pay. Major-General Grant, commanding the Department of the East, remitted the confinement because of the length of time Myer was in restraint while awaiting trial. Myer's ill-health at the time of committing the offences was also taken into consideration.

POWER USER COMPLAINS OF LOW WATER IN RIVER

Where Fault is Said To Lie---A Remedy Probably Soon Applied.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—What is wrong with the water powers of Peterborough, or with the management of the flow of it. Peterborough had better step down and out as far as soliciting manufacturing concerns to come here and locate, when the companies here that have invested their money and then cannot get power to run them at this season of the year when rains have been plentiful. Has the water been wasted this summer, or what is the trouble? Employes have to work short time and firms have to refuse orders on account of not being able to fill them promptly for want of power. I think our city fathers had better investigate this matter, and if no more power is to be had, do not mislead any more manufacturing concerns by bringing them here.

Yours,
ONE AFFECTED
Peterborough, Nov. 3, 1910.

Manufacturing Co., Fort Erie, Ont.

Note.—The Examiner is informed that there never has been a better flow of water in the river down to Nassau at this time of the year as there is now; and that the trouble is due to the management of the water below that point. However, it is stated that an engineer from Montreal will be here to-morrow to take measurements of the flow of the river, and it is possible that he will be accompanied by local engineers. It is probable that out of this there will come some action that will minimize or remove the conditions complained of by "One Affected."

MARRIED AFTER THIRTY-FIVE YEARS

CHICAGO, ILL., NOV. 3.—The blossom of a thirty-five year romance was reaped by Georgia A. Noe, of Marengo, Ohio, and Winifred Brown, of Morland, Kan., when they were married here at the home of the bride's nephew, F. E. Short.

Lovers in youth, the two had been separated by the sense of duty to her parents that kept Miss Noe by their side, and later by the marriage of her sweetheart to another girl. When freedom came to each the interrupted courtship was resumed and culminated recently.

Miss Noe was a leader of the young people of College Springs, Iowa, when the romance began. Mr. Brown attended school with her, and for several years they "kept company." At last he proposed, but was refused because the parents of Miss Noe were aged, and she was needed to care for them.

Brown married a short time later, his bride being another girl of the same town. Then he moved to Kansas. He prospered, and now owns a farm of more than 1,000 acres. Four children were born, and all are now grown men and women. Miss Noe remained in College Springs until her parents died, five years ago, and then went to Ohio to live with a brother.

Three years ago the first wife of Mr. Brown died, and a year later he wrote a letter to his youthful sweetheart, and a correspondence followed. The couple met at the Short home for the first time in twenty-four years.

NEW YORK, NOV. 3. Theodore Roosevelt is on a train, speeding towards Chicago, but he has taken time to wire back an answer to the charges of Dix, the Democratic candidate, that he was evading the real issue of the gubernatorial campaign. Roosevelt says Dix gets extremely valorous when he (Roosevelt) gets out of the State.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Permit me to call your attention to the growing importance of South America as an extensive and profitable field for the Canadian exporter. I should like to point out that it is not a question of Argentina alone, but all other Republics also, namely:

Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay, Ecuador, Venezuela, Chile, Peru, Colombia and Bolivia.

Regarding the important question of transport the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities have removed all difficulties in this way and will run a line of steamers direct to South American ports.

This is an important step in the right direction and it now only remains for the Canadian Manufacturer and producer to take advantage of this arrangement, which will enable them to ship from Canadian territory.

It seems to me that the first thing to be done, is to organize without delay. With this end in view, I have written to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, suggesting the immediate creation of a South American Intelligence Board for the collection and distribution of information.

Meantime I shall be pleased to reply to any inquiries, regarding the nature of merchandise most desirable for the requirements of the various South American Republics.

Respectfully,
H. M. BOYD.

PROF. DE LURY TO SPEAK ON SATURDAY EVENING

Meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society Postponed for One Night —Enjoyable Evening is Looked Forward to by the Members of the Society.

A PRESENTATION

On account of the entertainment in the Collegiate on Friday evening, the meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society has been postponed until the next evening, Saturday, November 5th.

Special preparation has been made for this, the opening meeting of the Society for this season. Professor Alfred T. De Lury, of the University of Toronto, who holds the position of President of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, will be the speaker of the evening. His reputation as a professor in the University warrants us in forecasting a most interesting and profitable lecture.

"The Astronomy of To-day" is the topic chosen by Prof. De Lury, and a large number of lantern slides will be used to illustrate the talk.

The auditorium of the Collegiate Institute will be used, as a large crowd is expected for the special occasion.

One of the features of the evening will be the presentation to the Society of the handsome new telescope, which the Hon. J. R. Stratton has donated. The telescope will be on view in the auditorium and at the conclusion of the meeting will be placed on the lawn for a short time for the benefit of those present.

In providing a lecture of such entertaining and educative a nature, a lecturer of such repute as Prof. De Lury, and undertaking such expense and trouble in operating the lantern views, the Royal Astronomical Society deserve the thanks of the public, particularly as no admission fee is asked. Prof. De Lury should be greeted with a full house on Saturday evening.

No Chance For The Offending Elder---Case Decided Against Him

Special to The Examiner.

PITTSBURG, NOV. 3.—The Synod of the Presbyterian Church, the highest court of appeal here of that denomination, sitting in Pittsburg today, went over a mass of testimony in the Holman Pollock case and decided that when an elder in a Presbyterian Church so far forgets himself as to meet in a lonesome and dark wood at night a handsome widow, a member of another congregation, the heads of the offending elder's church are right in discharging him from the board of elders and dismissing him from church membership. It was also decided that the board of elders of the other church was right in discharging the widow from their congregation.

BOMBARDED OUT OF WOODS

The Holman Pollock case, which, for some months has kept Western Pennsylvania in an uproar, was thus finally settled. Dr. A. Holman, of Unionville, Butler County, and for many years elder in the Presbyterian Church there, had been surprised with Mrs. Jennie Pollock, a country school teacher and church worker, in the Muddy Creek congregation, in a wood near her school house one night last July.

There had been much talk regarding the pair, and finally five men, from each of the congregations, went together to obtain what they considered evidence against the elder and his pretty friend. The pair had been in the habit of taking frequent buggy rides in the evening, and on this particular evening the pursuing party of church men found the elder's horse and buggy on the edge of a wood near the schoolhouse of Mrs. Pollock. There was no sign of the pair, and, while one of the party drove the horse and buggy away quietly, the others began a fusilade around the woods with shotguns and revolvers. It is alleged, and was sworn by these persons, that the elder and Mrs. Pollock quickly appeared, badly frightened.

BOTH LOSE THEIR APPEALS

After Holman had been removed from his eldership in the church, he made an appeal to the Butler Presbytery, which sustained the rest of the Board of Elders. The appeal was then made to the Synod.

Mrs. Pollock was suspended from church membership in the Muddy Creek congregation until a special committee could hear her case. It was decided that she must be relieved of church connections. Mrs. Pollock's case was also appealed to the Synod. Dr. Holman's attorney also having her case. The Synod decided unanimously that Dr. Holman and Mrs. Pollock could have no appeal through that body.

Dr. Holman is married and has a family of children. He is a member of one of the best known old western Pennsylvania families.

DANDRUFF CAUSED BY A GERM.

A New Discovery That Kills the Germ and Preevnts Baldness.

Pretty nearly all the hair preparations for dandruff have some merit in allaying itching of the scalp, and in being a fairly good dressing for the hair, but there is only one that recognizes what acuses dandruff, falling hair, and baldness, and that destroys the cause, a little germ — and that destroys the cause, coi shrdlu that is Newbro's Herpicide. This germ eats its way into the scalp, it digs up the scalp into little white scales. Unless it is destroyed there's no permanent stopping of falling hair and baldness. Newbro's Hericide kills the germ. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co. Detroit, Mich.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

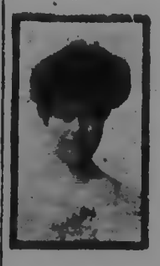
By Ruth Cameron

We have a family cat. She is an extremely gentle little ball of silver grey fur with benevolent yellow eyes. Such is the amiability of her disposition that we call her "Sweetness." Like the cat of washing powder fame, "she has never scratched yet."

That doesn't sound particularly alarming, does it?"

And yet this inoffensive creature was the cause of a tremendous scene yesterday afternoon.

A visiting lady with a sturdy little boy of five or six years old was in the living room with me when Sweetness took into her head to stroll in and pay her respects.



The youngster looked up, caught sight of the little furry creature strolling towards him, and with a series of blood-curdling shrieks, which must have convinced the neighbours we had gone insane and started murdering each other, and a leap which by no fault of his just failed to upset the lamp, landed in his mother's arms.

It was sometime before I grasped the situation and left the room with the astonished Sweetness.

It was some time longer before his mother had ceased to murmur "No, no, the wicked old kitty would not hurt him." "Was he frightened to death of the terrible kitty?" and similar courage-inspiring remarks.

When it was possible for her to set the boy down she smoothed out her dress, straightened her hat, and turning to me with the same peculiar pride with which women tell of their illness, explained, "Yes, he is frightened to death of cats. We have to be so careful not to let one get anywhere near him. Does he inherit it? Oh, no—you see, when he was a baby a big cat jumped upon him as he was lying in his carriage and frightened him, and he has never gotten over it. We have had such a terrible time with him. Why one—"

And for ten minutes the visiting lady related occasions on which bold feline had approached too near her unfortunate Harry.

During the recital Harry stood beside her listening proudly and occasionally prompting her with "And I had to have the doctor, didn't I, mamma?" "And I tipped the table over didn't I, mamma?"

"He has never gotten over it,' the visiting lady had said.

Of course not.

Why should he, when he realizes the pride his fond mother takes in his peculiarity?

Why should he, when everytime he performs he hold the centre of the stage for the next hour or two?

Why should he, when he is continually urged on by the fear-stimulating suggestion of, "The terrible kitty won't hurt you," and things of that sort?

Why should he, when every premium is placed on fostering his terror, and none on overcoming it?

Sensible boy—of course he will always regard the appearance of a cat as his cue to take the centre of the stage with a war whoop.

I don't criticize him one bit. I think his course is the inevitable one.

My only blame is for his mother and for any mother who, like her, encourages a child to make a fetish of his fear instead of helping him to overcome it.

There are, of course, cases of inborn terror which cannot be entirely eradicated.

But such terror surely can be modified and as far as possible hidden.

And even of such cases, I am afraid I am a bit apt to feel like the unsympathetic Dr. Johnson when he says:

"There is one species of terror which those who are unwilling to suffer the reproach of cowardice have wisely dignified with the name of 'antipathy.'"

HOW IT FEELS IN THE HIGH ALTITUDES

Johnston, the Holder of the World's Record Describes his Experiences---Pointed Machine's Nose Upwards When Over 8000 Feet up in the Air---What the Earth Looked Like.

NEW YORK, NOV. 1.—Ralph Johnston, the aviator, who broke the world's record for altitude at the Belmont Park aviation meeting, thus describes his memorable trip:

"I figure that I flew over 75 miles to attain an altitude of 9,714 feet this afternoon. This figure is based on the time that I was in the air (one hour and 32 minutes); the speed of my craft (55 miles an hour); and the time taken in dropping to earth, which I estimate at between five and six minutes.

"The first mile of my drop to this earth was accomplished in a trifle over two minutes. I never saw a machine that dropped so easily and yet maintained such wonderful stability.

"Although I was in somewhat of a purple haze up there, I never lost sight of the earth. Way down below I could see trees and houses that looked smaller than toy blocks. Far over to one side I could get a fleeting glimpse of the ocean. The bay in the distance looked like a volcanic eruption. As a guide, I kept a narrow, ribbon-like road running north and south. Like everything else, the road looked 'dished' below me.

"In spite of the cold, I felt a strange exhilaration. In endless circles and flying as swiftly as the motor would carry me, I rose to a height of 8,500 feet in from twenty to twenty-eight minutes. It was speedier than I had ever risen before and I had all I could do to attend the machine.

"A glance at the barograph strapped to my wrist told me I was in striking distance of the world's record. But suddenly my heart sank as I noticed that the little pencil on the barograph had ceased its upward tracing and was holding a steady level. With victory in my very grasp, I could feel it slipping away from me.

"I was floating then on a level simply plowing along in the air field. There were just two things for me to do to aid my desperate battle for the record.

"Level her down, my instinct told me, and I leveled her down, that is, I held her on an even keel and depended upon a sudden puff of wind or series of puffs to boost her upward. The aero didn't move an inch. In fact, she seemed to my overwrought imagination to be sinking a few inches at a time.

"Now, I tried a trick which is considered risky 100 feet from the ground, but which most people experienced in the art of air flying consider suicidal at such a height and in such thin atmosphere. Nursing my motor and almost rising from my seat in my eagerness, I pointed her nose directly upward, seeking what we call the proper "nose" angle. I finally found it at forty-five degrees (it must have been less, but it seemed to me more), and the little roadster shivered and quivered and slowly, very slowly, dug up into the air.

"Then followed the most nerve racking battle of my life. It took me one hour to push her up from 8,500 feet to 9,700 feet. How I did it at the angle luck only knows. I was seated like a cowboy mounted on a refractory mounting broncho. My feet were jacked up, and my head was lying back, as though reclining in a steep Morris chair.

"Now an dthen the Morris chair and its stability would disappear, and I seemed to be reclining in a huge rocking chair. Half the time I was lying almost flat on my back and straining for a view of the angels. In such a position one often loses his sense of the horizontal. Before I left on this trip I tied a little ribbon to the front of the machine. I was grateful for it then, for without it I'm afraid a panic would have seized me.

"Only once did I long to feel the springy turf of Belmont Park beneath my feet again. That was when I had almost reached the summit of the trip. I realized that I was penetrating further toward the unknown regions above than any man had ever done before in a flying machine.

"Look here, old fellow, you haven't got any idea what's ahead of you up there. You are rushing into the unknown and you may plump into a comet or a planet or something any moment. Two miles is an awful fall."

"Do you know that among the 6,400 publications in Canada and the United States which bid for classified advertising there are less than 400 which pay the advertiser a full return on classified advertising?"

This is the opening statement contained in an instructive booklet issued by the Mail Order World Advertising Agency, of Lockport, N.Y., entitled "Where Your Want Ads. Will Pull." This firm has been doing exhaustive calculations in ad. results for nearly a decade, and seems to be justified in claiming that it knows whereof it speaks.

From a carefully prepared card index, the best papers have been selected, and from those which pull especially well, the 40 Olist—including the Daily Examiner—has been compiled. This list is also contained in the above-mentioned booklet.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE WHITE SQUAW.

"The White Squaw," by Delia Clarke, was favourably received last evening by a large audience at the Grand Opera House. The play is an American romantic drama, with the scene in the Michigan wilderness of 1830. Miss Clarke takes the title role and her interpretation of the part shows strong evidence of her intimate knowlege of Indian life from observation.

The theme of the play is clean throughout, but the interest does not lag. There is a complex maze of plot, which has principally to do with the crossed paths of love. John E. Kellerd, as Jacques Cartier, a French-Canadian trapper, and Mordant, as Bruce Marshall, a trader, showed excellent qualities in their respective roles. William F. Kohman and Mindel Price took the parts of the White Squaw's Indian foster-parents in a manner true to the Indian life and character. Bernice Parker and Eda Brothers complete a cast that proved to be well chosen and well organized.

The next attraction at the Grand is on Friday night (to-morrow), when Blanche Ring appears in the "Yankee Girl."

LIBERAL WIN IS EXPECTED

Unbiased Observers Think Government Candidate Will Be Returned Over Nationalist — Strong Statements Are Made In Speeches Concerning the Government's Naval Policy—Voting To-day.

Victoriaville, Que., Nov. 3.—With several meeting yesterday, the Drummond-Arthabasca bye-election campaign has ended in appropriate manner. The quiet, easy-going habitants have given little sign how they intend to vote. The Liberals exhibit public confidence, but admit personal anxiety. The supporters of Mr. Gilbert, anti-marine oppositionist, loudly proclaim their hope, but privately admit that the result is dubious. Those not directly interested in one side or other, look for a Liberal victory by a reduced majority.

There has practically been but one subject of discussion during the fifteen days' campaign, the navy program. Mr. Gilbert has emphasized that he was nominated not as Conservative nor Nationalist, but as an "anti-naval oppositionist." Mr. Berrault, Government candidate, has frankly supported the whole naval policy, admitting it is a bitter pill, but that if it is refused the Conservatives would give the country a still more unpalatable dose of imperialistic medicine.

The County of Drummond-Arthabasca is a singularly hard one to estimate. It is twenty miles long by forty-five wide, and comprises thirty-five parishes. The majority of the population is French, but perhaps ten per cent. are English-speaking. The latter are expected to vote pretty solidly for the Liberal imperial policy. The result is in doubt. The Liberal organizers look for a majority of 500 in Drummond, and hope to break even in Arthabasca. The Nationalists look for a good majority in Arthabasca and hope to break even in Drummond. There are 10,000 possible votes in the riding, and at the last election 6,674 were cast, Mr. Louis Lavergne, winning by 834.

Tuesday, in a speech, Mr. Blondin, M.P. for Champlain, gave very strong sentiments. "We owe nothing to Great Britain," he said. "England did not take Canada for love, or to plant the cross of religion, as the French did, but in order to plant their trading posts and make money. The only liberties we have are those we won by force, and to-day England tries to dominate its colonies as imperial Rome once did."

There was scant applause for these remarks, and in reply Mr. Beland, M.P. for Beauce, turned to Mr. Blondin and said it was the first time in his career he had ever seen a member of Parliament under a British flag denounce the Mother Country.

Apparently Mr. Gilbert, Nationalist candidate, is not so strongly opposed to the navy as to its imperial aspect. If it were to be a strictly Canadian navy he said on Tuesday at St. Germain, he would not have accepted the candidature, but what he objected to was clause 23, which made the Canadian fleet part of the imperial navy in time of war. But Mr. Beland replied that a vote for Gilbert would be equal to one for Borden and a more advanced imperial policy.

Household Economy

How to Have the Best Cough Syrup and Save $2, by Making It at Home.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take two cups of granulated sugar, add one cup of warm water, and stir about 2 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

And you will find it the best cough syrup you ever used—even in whooping cough. You can feel it take hold—usually stops the most severe cough in 24 hours. It is just laxative enough, has a good tonic effect and taste is pleasant. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

It is a splendid remedy, too, for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, etc.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the healing pine elements. No other preparation will work in this formula.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup is now used and prized in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has often been imitated but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

PRESIDENT TAFT ANXIOUS

Henry M. Hoyt and Chas. M. Pepper of the State Department at Washington Leave for Ottawa With Instructions to Effect Closer Relations If Possible—First Conference to Be Held Nov. 5.

Washington, Nov. 3.—For the purpose of resuming negotintions looking to the establishment of closer relations between the United States and Canada, which was begun last spring, Henry M. Hoyt, counsellor, and C. M. Pepper, commercial adviser of the State Department, will leave for Ottawa to-day. The preliminary conference with the Canadian officials will be held Nov. 5. Secretary of State Knox expects to visit Ottawa shortly after the negotiations are re-opened.

President Taft is especially anxious that a reciprocity treaty be the outcome of the negotiations. Both Mr. Hoyt and Mr. Pepper have been in conference with the President almost constantly during the past few weeks, and they go to Ottawa bearing his instructions and his confidence that a satisfactory agreement will be reached.

Ottawa, Nov. 3.—A reciprocity conference between representatives of the United States and Canadian Governments, will be held here on Saturday, but the news contained in a despatch from Washington, to the effect that a deal will be closed up before the end of the present month is without foundation.

The call for a change in the tariff is from the grain growers of the west, who desire a reduction in the duties on agricultural implements.

Walthamstow Elects Liberal.

London, Nov. 3.—In the Walthamstow bye-election Sir J. Simon, Liberal, was elected, polling 16,673 votes against 13,907 cast for J. S. Johnson, the Unionist candidate.

Walthamstow went Liberal at the general election of 1885 by 175. It was then Unionist till the bye-election of 1897, when it went Liberal by 279. At the Khaki election of 1909 it went Unionist by 2,465. In 1906 J. A. Simon, Liberal, was elected by 3,837.

Mr. Simon held the seat in 1910 by 2,265 and on his appointment as Solicitor-General Mr. Simon, now Sir John Simon, had to return to his constituents, and has been re-elected by a majority increased to 2,766.

Walthamstow, or Southwest Essex, is an industrial constituency, being mainly peopled by unskilled workers who earn their wages in London, but live in Walthamstow. Many of the prominent Unionists wished Sir John Simon to be returned unopposed, but, allowing for this cause of Unionists' weakness, the election indicates that the Asquith Government is holding its own.

Bouquets for Teddy.

New York, Nov. 3.—The Democratic state campaign here reached flood tide last night at a meeting in Carnegie Hall, where John A. Dix, the nominee for governor, made his first public address in the city. The meeting also served as the occasion for Mayor Gaynor's long-expected formal announcement of his support of the ticket.

Mr. Dix devoted the greater part of a 3,000-word speech to a denunciation of Theodore Roosevelt, whom he referred to as an apostle of tumult and the protagonist of misrepresentation, agitator and egoist, creator of unrest, instigator of panic and destructive agent of business depression.

Up-to-Date Burglars.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 3.—Motor cycles are the latest vehicles to be used by burglars in Kentucky. A gang of them mounted on these swift-moving machines raided six small towns in Boyle County Tuesday night and early yesterday morning, and escaped with nearly a thousand dollars in cash.

Let Off Easy.

Ottawa, Nov. 3.—John Pelletier, the Senate wardrobe keeper, arrested on Tuesday for attempting to shoot his son and the latter's wife, got off yesterday with a fine of $10 and $2 costs. The charge was reduced to one of discharging firearms in the city limits.

In the Cheese Belt.

Warkworth, Nov. 3.—The dairy instructor for this district estimates that there has been 20 per cent. more cheese made in his locality this year than last year, with fewer cows.

150 G.T.R MEN ARE STILL OUT

Vice-President Murdock of the Brotherhood Condemns the Vindictive and Retaliatory Policy of the Company In Not Adhering to the Promise Made at Time of Agreement—Western Officials Offenders.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Although, according to the terms of settlement of the G.T.R. strike, all the men should have been returned back to their former positions, there are still, approximately, 150 conductors, trainmen and yardmen still out on the system. There is bitter feeling amongst them, and Vice-Presidents Murdock and Berry, representing the Brotherhood of Trainmen and Conductors, are now in Montreal trying to fix it up. Originally 3,800 men went on strike on July 19. Mr. Murdock was communicated with last night and declared there was no doubt that the matter would be ultimately settled to the men's satisfaction, but he strongly resented the "vindictive and retaliatory policy of the company" in delaying to live up to the understanding. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labor, has been appealed to, and it is from this quarter that Mr. Murdock hopes to obtain speedy redress. The Labor Minister signed a telegram to Messrs. Murdock and Berry on Aug. 17, when the settlement was made, assuring that all the men were to be reinstated. This was in reply to a demurring message from the two vice-presidents named, who wanted a strict interpretation of the words "as soon as possible," contained in the company's agreement to take back the employes.

The greatest obstruction in the way of re-engaging the men has come from London, it is reported. The men still out are practically all west of Toronto, viz., Stratford, St. Thomas, London, Palmerston and Windsor, and also at Allandale. There are also a few not reinstated on the Central Vermont Railway.

"I am wiring every point on the line to-night," said Mr. Murdock, "to ascertain the exact conditions, and when I receive the replies, I will take the matter again to the Minister of Labor. Mackenzie King has given us the most positive assurance that the men would be taken back, and I am sure everything will be all right."

A Montreal despatch of Thursday last said Mr. King had conferred with Manager Hays and that the Grand Trunk would make an effort to re-employe all the men still out of work.

PLAYING "RAFFLES"

Toronto Youth Arrested In Baltimore Confesses to Burglaries.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 3.—George H. Barnette, alias Kemp, aged 23 years, 20 Christie street, and Miss Florence Tomlinson, aged 18 years, daughter of Albert T. Tomlinson, 526 Delaware avenue, both of Toronto, Canada, were arrested here last night by Headquarters' Detective Herman Poblet and locked up at the central station.

Barnette is charged with being "Raffles" in real life. When arrested he wore evening clothes, carried two pretty domino masks, had a loaded revolver and $200 worth of jewelry in his possession. He was arrested when about to enter a pawnshop. He has confessed to Chief of Detectives McGovern of committing a score of burglaries in New York, Philadelphia and other cities.

Miss Tomlinson, whose father is a car inspector of the G.T.R., was made the victim of a mock marriage, when she was taken from home by Barnette. The couple went to Niagara, where a fake ceremony was performed on Aug. 26. At headquarters last night she denounced her supposed husband, and says she shall leave him.

About two months ago, while living in Newark, N.J., Miss Tomlinson shot herself accidentally through the left breast with the revolver taken from Barnette.

Police chiefs throughout the north have been notified of the capture of Barnette. He has confessed to a number of robberies.

Miss Tomlinson says that Barnette forced her to read "Raffles" to him, with stories of famous detectives. Miss Tomlinson will be held by the authorities, pending word from her parents.

French Cabinet Resigns.

Paris, Nov. 3.—The French Cabinet resigned yesterday. Although in fact that there was a divergence of views among the Ministers concerning legislative measures designed to prevent crises similar to that brought about by the recent railway strike, was well known, the resignation created a sensation, as it had been expected that Premier Briand would remain and remodel the Ministry in harmony with his views.

The exact nature of Briand's program has not been announced, but it is understood that both M. Millerand, Minister of Public Works, Posts and Telegraphs, and M. Viviani, Minister of Labor, dissented, particularly Millerand, who insisted upon the principle of arbitration.

Yesterday afternoon President Falleries asked Briand to form a new Ministry and the latter accepted the task. The new Cabinet will be largely the old Ministry re-organized, the portfolio being distributed with special reference to a solution of labor problems, including the development of means by which employes of public service corporations may obtain redress for grievances without resort to a strike, paralyzing traffic and industry generally, and to devise a method of combatting the revolutionary element of the proletariat.

Selected a Candidate.

Saskatoon, Nov. 3.—A largely attended convention of farmers of Saskatoon County provincial constituency, met here yesterday, and unanimously nominated John Evans as Conservative candidate.

HOCKEY CLUB EXECUTIVE IS TO MEET TO-NIGHT

There will be a meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club in the Examiner office to-night at 8 o'clock, and a full attendance is expected, as business of importance will come up for discussion. Arrangements will be made for the annual meeting and other important matters will be taken up.

JUNIOR O.H.A. TEAM FOR LINDSAY THIS SEASON

(Lindsay Post)

Will Lindsay be represented by a hockey team in the O. H. A.? This query has been heard quite often of late on the streets, and it is up to those who are interested in this great winter pastime to get busy and state their intentions.

There is plenty of material for a fast team and an effort should be made to have the town represented in Junior O. H. A. The youngsters should be encouraged. That is the only way to build up a team, as the juniors of this winter will develop into the intermediate players of a few years hence. It is important that a meeting be held at an early date to talk over the situation and size up the material available. Let the meeting be called at an early date, as there is no time to lose.

CUBS OFFER $30,000 FOR RELEASE OF MATTHEWSON

CHICAGO, NOV. 2.—Chas. W. Murphy, President and owner of the Chicago National League baseball team, announced today that if President Brush of the Giants was willing to sell Matthewson he would pay $30,000 for his release, and that the pitcher could name his own salary. "We needed a pitcher like Matty in the world's series," he said, "and with him in the box there would have been a different tale to tell about the big series.

"I do not expect to get Matthewson from Brush, but my offer stands, and I will sign a check for the amount at any time that Brush desires to part with the pitcher."

Murphy's offer is regarded by President Brush as a joke. Brush wired Murphy an offer of thirty cents for the Cubs, all of whom he would fire except Cole. He might need Cole because he is a barber.

SHOT THROUGH HEART WITH BABY IN HIS ARMS

Special to The Examiner.

LOUISVILLE, NOV. 3.—A woman whose face bore lines of grief set on the patient expression of the mountain people, walked through the corridors of the Federal building here this week, carrying in her arms a beautiful two-year-old girl whose baby head was crowned with a tangle of golden curls.

Many who stopped to pet the little one noticed a round hole in the front of her dress that went through three folds in a plait. The hole was brown around the edges, as though it might have been made by a hot poker. Instead, it marked the course of a bullet, one that just three weeks ago took the life of the baby's father while he held her in his arms.

The woman was Mrs. D. C. Moles, of Clinton County. She came to Louisville to testify in the case of a man named Lee, who must answer in Federal Court to the charge of attempting to defraud the Government out of tax on whisky, which he had made at his distillery in Clinton County.

D. C. Moles was a witness in the case. He had to go to Albany, the county seat, for a hearing. Moles knew t... always exists in the... the man who becom... men" in the Hargis-Cockrell feud at Jackson, Ky., saved himself for months by walking around the streets with his baby in his arms. The assassins, in their confessions, afterward told of how they were thwarted time after time while they lay in wait for Marcum, because he carried the baby. One day he ventured to the courthouse alone and was shot to death at the threshold.

Moles thought he was safe as he strode along the road with his baby in his arms. But his fancied protection was vain. Either Moles's enemies were so vindictive that they did not care whether they harmed the child, or the marksman who hid in the bushes to kill him felt so sure of his aim that he did not regard it as a risk. At any rate, there was the crack of a rifle and the bullet tore through the little dress of the baby and into Moles's body, not harming the child in the slightest, but piercing the father's heart. He fell dead in the road with the little one in his arms.

Mrs. Mole came to Louisville as a witness in place of her husband. At the time the case was being continued in court here Sheriff J. C. Perkins, of Clinton County, was arresting Sam Lee, who is accused of the assassination. He is a brother of ... against whom Moles ... witness.

New Group In Charge.

Montreal, Nov. 3.—The directors who have managed the affairs of the Montreal Street Railway Co. for many years past are down and out, following one of the most brilliant and daring raids ever made by one group of capitalists on another.

It was supposed that Senator Forget, Sir Montague Allan, Robert Meighen, and several other millionaires were impregnable in the street railway control, and so they were before such bright men as E. A. Robert, D. Lorne McGibbon, J. W. McConnell and others, started in to buy control about a year ago. Yesterday the old directors did not even make a fight, neither did they ask for a vote. One ballot was cast and the change was made the new directors being E. H. Wilson, J. W. McConnell, George G. Foster, K.C., D. Lorne McGibbon, W. C. Finley, J. M. Wilson and E. A. Robert. The new president is E. A. Robert, while J. W. McConnell is the vice-president, with D. McDonald re-elected general manager.

It is said that it took nine millions of money to swing the deal.

Must Not Interfere.

Ottawa, Nov. 3.—In connection with the approval of the route map of the Canadian Northern Railway from a point a short distance west of Edmonton to Yellow Head Pass, yesterday, Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways, laid down the important stipulation that the Canadian Northern must not in any way interfere with the townsites of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

When plans were produced, Mr. Kelliher, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, stated that, from a point seventy-five miles west of Edmonton to Yellow Head Pass, the Canadian Northern very closely parallel the Grand Trunk Pacific, so closely, as a matetr of fact, that there was a danger that a line might be built through various townsites which had been laid out by the G.T.P. Co., which municipalities are interested.

Sir Percy Lake Leaves.

Ottawa, Nov. 3.—Major-General Sir Percy Lake left for Quebec yesterday afternoon, en route for England, his term as military adviser of the Government having expired. He will be accompanied as far as Quebec by his brother, R. S. Lake, M.P. for Qu'Appelle, Sask.

All of the chief officers of the Militia Department and his successor, General Mackenzie, were at the station to bid him good-bye, and among the civilians present were: R. L. Borden, M.P.; Lord Lascelles, Lady Sybil Grey, and Lady Evelyn Grey. A number of Lady Lake's lady friends in the city presented her a few days ago with a diamond bracelet, as a little resemblance of her sojourn in the capital.

Sir Percy Lake has not been made acquainted yet with the purposes of the War Office regarding his future movements.

Too Frightened to Cry.

San Francisco, Nov. 3.—Lying in bed beside her sleeping husband on Tuesday night, Mrs. Antonio Valentine heard a crash of glass, and a moment later saw two men climb through the window of the room from the porch roof. Too frightened to move or cry out, Mrs. Valentine watched one of the intruders steal up to the bed, place a pistol at her husband's breast and fire a shot that brought instant death to the sleeping man. By the time the woman recovered her voice the murderers had escaped.

Too Cosmopolitan.

Brantford, Nov. 3.—After a month's effort to get the city council to vote enough money to provide accommodation for a new patrol wagon, already built, the request of the police commissioners was negatived by a tie vote, three times Tuesday night, half of them did not approve of the idea. Control. The local chief of police Artistig accused of being too cosmopolitan.

Deaf Mute Tried to Suicide.

Brantford, Nov. 3.—Harry Braven, a deaf and dumb mute, arrested for being drunk, tried to commit suicide in the police cells here yesterday morning, by hanging himself with his clothes. He was noticed by another prisoner and was cut down in time.

Change In Colonial Office.

London, Nov. 3.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The London Daily Mail says that the work of the Colonial Office will shortly be divided, a new Secretary of State being appointed to deal with the business of the self-governing dominions.

The Mail's announcement is probably the intelligent anticipation of events, as some change in the Colonial Office had been hinted at by Lord Crewe, but in any case it will not take place until after the Imperial Conference, and it may not involve the appointment of a new Minister.

Signers Were Not Voters.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 3.—Chippawa Council at its meeting Tuesday night rejected a petition asking that the local option bylaw be submitted to voters Jan. 1. The meeting was a lively one. The petition had 79 signers, but the names of 15 temperance advocates were found to be not on the voters' list, as required by statute.

Burglar a Would-Be Murderer.

Port Arthur, Nov. 3.—A man who gave the name of James Murphy, has been sentenced to 23 months in the Central Prison for burglary of the Marks' Clave store. If his threats are to be believed, he was looking for a gun to shoot a man who put him off the train for the west.

Thirty-Eight Years a Teacher.

The Perfection Oil Heater quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap, put in like a cork in a bottle, is attached by a chain. This heater has a cool handle and a damper top.

The Perfection Oil Heater has an automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back, so the wick can be quickly cleaned. The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged and can be unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel, is strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

Old Practitioner Dead.

St. Thomas, Nov. 3.—Dr. Leonard Luton, one of the oldest practitioners in this city, and an ex-alderman, died at his home here Tuesday night, aged 75 years, after a few days' illness. He was a native of Yarmouth, and was formerly superintendent of schools in East Elgin. He has been for years a member of the council of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons.

O. A. C. Students Rowdy.

Guelph, Nov. 3.—Following up the Hallowe'en doings, the Ontario Agricultural College students attended the performance of "The Alaskan" at the opera house here Tuesday night, 300 strong, and forced the curtain down. They had formed a torchlight procession down to the city, headed by the college band, and lined up in a body in the gods.

Confetti-throwing and pea-shooting started the show, and in the last act the boys threw down little bags of flour indiscriminately at the actors and the audience. In the finale the shower was so great that the curtain had to be rung down to protect the company.

The opera house will be closed to them in future, Manager Green says.

System Needs Extending.

New York, Nov. 3.—The opinion of the Toronto sub-committee on medical inspection, who are studying the system here is that Toronto is on the right track, but that the system needs extending, so that it will cover all the schools. They have been investigating the schools in the "Bowery," under the guidance of Dr. Leopold Marcus, one of the supervising inspectors. The pupils are examined very rapidly, nearly one per minute passing through the doctor's hands.

HOCKEY CLUB EXECUTIVE IS TO MEET TO-NIGHT

There will be a meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club in the Examiner office to-night at 8 o'clock, and a full attendance is expected, as business of importance will come up for discussion. Arrangements will be made for the annual meeting and other important matters will be taken up.

JUNIOR O.H.A. TEAM FOR LINDSAY THIS SEASON

(Lindsay Post)

Will Lindsay be represented by a hockey team in the O. H. A.? This query has been heard quite often of late on the streets, and it is up to those who are interested in this great winter pastime to get busy and state their intentions.

There is plenty of material for a fast team and an effort should be made to have the town represented in Junior O. H. A. The youngsters should be encouraged. That is the only way to build up a team, as the juniors of this winter will develop into the intermediate players of a few years hence. It is important that a meeting be held at an early date to talk over the situation and size up the material available. Let the meeting be called at an early date, as there is no time to lose.

CUBS OFFER $30,000 FOR RELEASE OF MATTHEWSON

CHICAGO, NOV. 2.—Chas. W. Murphy, President and owner of the Chicago National League baseball team, announced to-day that if President Brush of the Giants was willing to sell Matthewson he would pay $30,000 for his release, and that the pitcher could name his own salary. "We needed a pitcher like Matty in the world's series," he said, "and with him in the box there would have been a different tale to tell about the big series.

"I do not expect to get Matthewson from Brush, but my offer stands, and I will sign a check for the amount at any time that Brush desires to part with the pitcher."

Murphy's offer is regarded by President Brush as a joke. Brush wired Murphy an offer of thirty cents for the Cubs, all of whom he would fire except Cole. He might need Cole because he is a barber.

SHOT THROUGH HEART WITH BABY IN HIS ARMS

Special to The Examiner.

LOUISVILLE, NOV. 3.—A woman whose face bore lines of grief set on the patient expression of the mountain people, walked through the corridors of the Federal building here this week, carrying in her arms a beautiful two-year-old girl whose baby head was crowned with a tangle of golden curls.

Many who stopped to pet the little one noticed a round hole in the front of her dress that went through three folds in a plait. The hole was brown around the edges, as though it might have been made by a hot poker. Instead, it marked the course of a bullet, one that just three weeks ago took the life of the baby's father while he held her in his arms.

The woman was Mrs. D. C. Moles, of Clinton County. She came to Louisville to testify in the case of a man named Lee, who must answer in Federal Court to the charge of attempting to defraud the Government out of tax on whisky, which he had made at his distillery in Clinton County.

D. C. Moles was a witness in the case. He had to go to Albany, [illegible] the county seat, for a preliminary hearing. Moles knew the danger that always exists in the mountains for the man who becomes a witness for Uncle Sam and the revenuers," and when he started to Albany he was accompanied by his wife and little daughter. There is an unwritten law among the mountaineers that one shall not shoot his enemy when there is danger of hurting women or children. It is all right to lie in ambush and shoot an enemy in the back without giving him the slightest chance, but if there are women or children within range the opportunity must be permitted to slip rather than run the risk of harming them. J. B. Marcum, who was one of the "marked men" in the Hargis-Cockrell feud at Jackson, Ky., saved himself for months by walking around the streets with his baby in his arms. The assassins, in their confessions, afterward told of how they were thwarted time after time while they lay in wait for Marcum, because he carried the baby. One day he ventured to the courthouse alone and was shot to death at the threshold.

Moles thought he was safe as he strode along the road with his baby in his arms. But his fancied protection was vain. Either Moles's enemies were so vindictive that they did not care whether they harmed the child, or the marksman who hid in the bushes to kill him felt so sure of his aim that he did not regard it as a risk. At any rate, there was the crack of a rifle and the bullet tore through the little dress of the baby and into Moles's body, not harming the child in the slightest, but piercing the father's heart. He fell dead in the road with the little one in his arms.

Mrs. Mole came to Louisville as a witness in place of her husband. At the time the case was being continued in court here Sheriff J. C. Perkins, of Clinton County, was arresting Sam Lee, who is accused of the assassination. He is a brother of [illegible] against whom Moles was to be a witness.

This evening there will be divine service, when a sermon will be preached by Venerable Archdeacon Warren. The public is invited to attend. A GIRL OF 17 MARRIES TWICE

Special to The Examiner.

VANCOUVER, NOV. 3.—Only 17 years old and married twice and divorced once from the same man is the record of Mrs. Marion Marshall, who for the second time became the wife of Mike Eptein, more than twice her age and a tailor in Portland.

The couple came from Portland yesterday afternoon, but had no witness with them. They were much disappointed, but later found Louis Lucky, a peddlar on the street, and picked him up to act as their witness, which he did. He seemed to know the couple.

Going to the home of M. B. Kies, County Auditor, they secured a license. In answering the legal questions it was found that the girl and the man, who was thirty-seven years old, were married in June 1909, and were divorced in January 1910, she being the complainant. Epstein again obtained his former wife's consent and they are now man and wife and they seemed happy.

The peddlar led the way to the minister's home, where the ceremony was performed.

New Group In Charge.

Montreal, Nov. 3.—The directors who have managed the affairs of the Montreal Street Railway Co. for many years past are down and out, following one of the most brilliant and daring raids ever made by one group of capitalists on another.

It was supposed that Senator Forget, Sir Montague Allan, Robert Meighen, and several other millionaires were impregnable in the street railway control, and so they were before such bright men as E. A. Robert, D. Lorne McGibbon, J. W. McConnell and others started in to buy control about a year ago. Yesterday the old directors did not even make a fight, neither did they ask for a vote. One ballot was cast and the change was made. The new directors being: E. H. Wilson, J. W. McConnell, George G. Foster, K.C., D. Lorne McGibbon, W. C. Finley, J. M. Wilson and E. A. Robert. The new president is E. A. Robert while J. W. McConnell is the vice-president, with D. McDonald reelected general manager.

It is said that it took nine millions of money to swing the deal.

Must Not Interfere.

Ottawa, Nov. 3. In connection with the approval of the route map of the Canadian Northern Railway from a point a short distance west of Edmonton to Yellow Head Pass, yesterday, Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways, laid down the important stipulation that the Canadian Northern must not in any way interfere with the townsites of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

When plans were produced, Mr. Kelliher, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, stated that, from a point seventy-five miles west of Edmonton to Yellow Head Pass, the Canadian Northern very closely parallels the Grand Trunk Pacific, so closely, as a matetr of fact, that there was a danger that a line might be built through various townsites which had been laid out by the G.T.P. Co., which municipalities are interested.

Sir Percy Lake Leaves.

Ottawa, Nov. 3.—Major-General Sir Percy Lake left for Quebec yesterday afternoon, en route for England, his term as military adviser of the Government having expired. He will be accompanied as far as Quebec by his brother, R. S. Lake, M.P. for Qu Appelle, Sask.

All of the chief officers of the Militia Department and his successor, General Mackenzie, were at the station to bid him good-bye, and among the civilians present were: R. L. Borden, M.P.; Lord Lascelles, Lady Sybil Grey, and Lady Evelyn Grey. A number of Lady Lake's lady friends in the city presented her a few days ago with a diamond bracelet, as a little resemblance of her sojourn in the capital.

Sir Percy Lake has not been made acquainted yet with the purposes of the War Office regarding his future movements.

Too Frightened to Cry.

San Francisco, Nov. 3.—Lying in bed beside her sleeping husband on Tuesday night, Mrs. Antonio Valentine heard a crash of glass, and a moment later saw two men climb through the window of the room from the porch roof. Too frightened to move or cry out, Mrs. Valentine watched one of the intruders steal up to the bed, place a pistol at her husband's breast and fire a shot that brought instant death to the sleeping man. By the time the woman recovered her voice the murderers had escaped.

Too Cosmopolitan.

Brantford, Nov. 3.—After a month's effort to get the city council to vote enough money to provide accommodation for a new patrol wagon, already built, the request of the police commissioners was negatived by a tie vote, taken three times Tuesday night, half of whom did not approve of the idea of a patrol. The local chief of police is being accused of being too cosmopolitan.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

Winnipeg, Nov. 3.—William A. Hope, halfbreed, was found guilty in the Assizes yesterday of manslaughter, in connection with the death of Frederick Smith at Black Bear Island, Lake Winnipeg. The wife of the dead man was the principal witness against him.

Deaf Mute Tried to Suicide.

Brantford, Nov. 3.—Harry Brawen, a deaf and dumb mute, arrested for being drunk, tried to commit suicide in the police cells here yesterday morning, by hanging himself with his clothes. He was noticed by another prisoner and was cut down in time.

Change In Colonial Office.

London, Nov. 3.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The London Daily Mail says that the work of the Colonial Office will shortly be divided, a new Secretary of State being appointed to deal with the business of the self-governing dominions.

The Mail's announcement is probably the intelligent anticipation of events, as some change in the Colonial Office had been hinted at by Lord Crewe, but in any case it will not take place until after the Imperial Conference, and it may not involve the appointment of a new Minister.

Signers Were Not Voters.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 3.—Chippawa Council at its meeting Tuesday night rejected a petition asking that the local option bylaw be submitted to voters Jan. 1. The meeting was a lively one. The petition had 79 signers, but the names of 15 temperance advocates were found to be not on the voters' list, as required by statute.

Burglar a Would-Be Murderer.

Port Arthur, Nov. 3.—A man who gave the name of James Murphy, has been sentenced to 23 months in the Central Prison for burglary of the Marks' Clave store. If his threats are to be believed, he was looking for a gun to shoot a man who put him off the train for the west.

Thirty-Eight Years a Teacher.

Windsor, Nov. 3.—Miss Elizabeth Bartlett, in point of service the oldest member of the public school teacher staff in Windsor, has asked to be relieved of her duties at the end of the year. Miss Bartlett has taught school in Windsor for 38 years.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

you do not have to work close to the stove, which is usually far from the window. You can work where you wish, and be warm. You can work on dull winter days in the full light near the window, without being chilled to the bone.

The Perfection Oil Heater quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap, put in like a cork in a bottle, is attached by a chain. This heater has a cool handle and a damper top.

The Perfection Oil Heater has an automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back, so the wick can be quickly cleaned. The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged and can be unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel, is strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

Old Practitioner Dead.

St. Thomas, Nov. 3.—Dr. Leonard Luton, one of the oldest practitioners in this city, and an ex-alderman, died at his home here Tuesday night, aged 75 years, after a few days' illness. He was a native of Yarmouth, and was formerly superintendent of schools in East Elgin. He has been for years a member of the council of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons.

O. A. C. Students Rowdy.

Guelph, Nov. 3.—Following up the Hallowe'en doings, the Ontario Agricultural College students attended the performance of "The Alaskan" at the opera house here Tuesday night, 300 strong, and forced the curtain down. They had formed a torchlight procession down to the city, headed by the college band, and lined up in a body in the gods.

Confetti-throwing and pea-shooting started the show, and in the last act the boys threw down little bags of flour indiscriminately at the actors and the audience. In the finale the shower was so great that the curtain had to be rung down to protect the company.

The opera house will be closed to them in future, Manager Green says.

System Needs Extending.

New York, Nov. 3.—The opinion of the Toronto sub-committee on medical inspection, who are studying the system here is that Toronto is on the right track, but that the system needs extending, so that it will cover all the schools. They have been investigating the schools in the "Bowery," under the guidance of Dr. Leopold Marcus, one of the supervising inspectors. The pupils are examined very rapidly, nearly one per minute passing through the doctor's hands.

STOMACH DISTRESS IS ENDED FOREVER

Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Gas or Indigestion Vanish in Five Minutes

Take your sour, out-of-order stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh of Stomach; it doesn't matter — take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangle and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your former misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring; the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fulness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness or many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas, or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself in five minutes that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin.

WEDDING BELLS

KENNEDY—MANSON.

A very quiet and pretty wedding took place yesterday at the home of Mrs. Agnes Kennedy, 518 Cedar street, when Mr. Garvin Kennedy was united in marriage to Miss Jessie Manson, also of Peterborough.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. C. Riddiford, pastor of Park street Baptist church. After the ceremony, the bridal party, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Garvin Kennedy, with Mr. Joseph Bawnsley who supported the groom, and Miss Marion Kennedy sister of the groom, who made a most charming bridesmaid, with the invited guests, sat down to the wedding dinner. The young couple were the recipients of many beautiful presents, which showed the great esteem in which they are held by a wide circle of friends who all united in wishing them much happiness over the mysterious voyage of life.

Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy will take up residence at present with Mrs. Agnes Kennedy, 515 Cedar street.

COLLINS—RICHARDSON

A quiet but very pretty wedding was solemnized Wednesday Oct 19, at one o'clock, at "Pine Grove" farm, the home of Mr. John Richardson, Norwood Road, when his daughter Anna Margaret, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert G. Collins, son of the late Hugh Collins, Asphodel. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. W. Barrett, pastor of the Methodist church, Hastings, in the presence of only a few intimate friends, the wedding being of a private nature. To the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss Ethel Collins, sister of the groom, the bride entered the parlour leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away, and took her place beneath an arch of evergreen and white. The bride looked charming in a dress of ivory Duchess satin, with silk embroidery trimmings, and carried a shower bouquet of white carnations and chrysanthemums. The only attendant was the bride's little sister, Miss Joyce Richardson, who carried the ring in a basket of flowers and looked very pretty in a gown of white silk.

After the ceremony and hearty congratulations had been bestowed on the young couple, the guests sat down to a sumptuous repast. The bride's health was proposed by Rev. Mr. Barrett and responded to by the groom.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain; to the little flower girl a gold necklace with amethyst-set pendant, and the organist, a gold crescent and star brooch, set with pearls.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents.

Mr. and Mrs. Collins left on the 4.06 C.P.R. train for Toronto, Niagara, Rochester, and on their return will take up residence at "Maple Springs." The bride travelled in a navy diagonal serge suit, with hat to match.

OBITUARY

MRS. ROBERT KERR.

The many friends of Mrs. Robert Kerr, formerly of Peterborough, were shocked and grieved to hear of her death in Toronto at the beginning of the week. The deceased had a large number of friends and acquaintances in Peterborough. She had been ill for some time. The funeral took place to-day.

JAMES CECIL PERRIN.

James Cecil Perrin, who is well known in Peterborough and district died at his home, Pontypool, at the age of 28 years, and was laid at rest in Pontypool cemetery yesterday afternoon. Mr. Perrin was the son of Mr. Josiah Perrin, and was engaged as a general store keeper. He is well known in Peterborough and vicinity from having made frequent business visits. The cause of his death was typhoid fever, supposed to have been contracted at the fall exhibition at Orono.

Note.—According to reports which may be, and it is to be hoped are, exaggerated, a most serious outbreak of typhoid, is attributed to a certain place in Orono at which meals were served on exhibition day. It is stated that of the 115 that took supper at this place at that time, all but nine have been attacked with typhoid and that fifteen have died, of which three were members of the Bowmanville Band. It is said that the citizens of Orono are exempt, but that the cases come from a wide area of surrounding country. It is known that there are in the two hospital in Peterborough, seven or eight cases each sent in from outside points, and there have been several deaths here, two bodies having been despatched from the local railway station yesterday. If the statements made are even approximately true, there must have been some specific condition of very serious character that produces such extensive infection.

WILL SAVE THE RESERVE

Minister of Lands and Mines Announces That $290,000 Will Be Expended on the Purchase of the Existing Timber Licenses In Great Park — Decision Promised to Save Over a Million Dollars.

Toronto, Nov. 4.—One of the most progressive steps yet taken by the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines for the conservation of the natural resources of Ontario was announced yesterday by Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, involving the settlement of the question that has arisen over the rights of certain licensees to cut timber within the boundaries of Algonquin Park, by a payment of $290,000 out of the provincial treasury. The licenses are held by the Munn Lumber Co., Orillia, and include nearly every kind of timber found in that part of the province.

While no statement is forthcoming as to the fund from which the $290,000 will be drawn, it is not unlikely that debentures will be issued to provide the amount. The negotiations have been carried on for nearly three months, and the settlement necessitated a survey of that portion of the park involved in the licenses, which was done under the personal supervision of the Minister.

What the saving to the province is can only be estimated, but apart from the conservation of the natural beauty of Algonquin Park, and maintaining it as a forest reserve and game preserve, the value of the timber thus secured from despoilation is said to be in the neighborhood of one million dollars.

A statement was given out yesterday by Hon. Frank Cochrane, in which he said:

"It is well-known that the destruction of the beauties and uses of the Algonquin National Park was threatened by certain timber licensees, proceeding to cut and remove varieties of timber other than pine, which their licenses gave them the right to do. As soon as the devastation began an outcry arose, and the Government promptly requested the company to cease cutting, in order to arrive, if possible, at some arrangement whereby, without injustice to them or the public, the park might be preserved to the people of the province for the uses to which it was dedicated by act of the Legislature.

"The territory was set apart in 1893 to provide a public park and forest reserve, fish and game preserve, health resort and pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the province. A staff of rangers were placed in it, the game protected, and forest fires kept out. All this has entailed a large expenditure. Now the park is alive with game of all kinds, deer and beaver being very numerous. It has become a great pleasure resort. Thousands of people have visited it and it is undeniably one of the most beautiful natural parks in the Dominion, if not on this continent.

"From a variety of sources, excluding timber altogether, probably an annual revenue of $15,000 or $20,000 might be derived from the park, and this, in itself, will go a long way towards paying the interest on the money required to purchase the rights of the company."

Will Go Over Horseshoe Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 4.—Prof. (Bobby) Leach says that he will go over the Horseshoe Falls here on the afternoon of Sunday, Nov. 13, at 3 o'clock. The venture is to be made in an enclosed boat, invented and loaned for the occasion by an octogenarian scientist, James Mitchell of Arrow River, Man. Mitchell wanted to go over in the boat himself, but was persuaded by his family that he is too old. He has arranged share profits of the venture with Leach. The boat is now on its way here. It is twenty-five feet long, of steel, pointed and cigar shaped, without propulsive power. Its inventor has sent a duplicate boat to Liverpool, and seeks to have it adopted by the British navy for use as a lifeboat.

Canada a Model.

Melbourne, Nov. 4.—Thomas Tait made an important speech at a demonstration in his honor, following his resignation as director-general of the railway system.

He urged upon his hearers the necessity of advertising the resources of Victoria abroad. He was able to draw upon his long experience in Canada to quote examples of how progress had been quickened by advertising.

It is understood Mr. Tait does not propose to enter the railway world, but will attend to his private affairs in Canada.

Great Peace Celebration.

Winnipeg, Nov. 4.—To celebrate one hundred years of peace between Canada and the United States, a monster demonstration of veterans will be held here in 1912, to which will be invited old soldiers from all America. The celebration will also commemorate the British victories during the war of 1812. Next year the local veterans' association will invite all veterans from western Canada and the northern states to a demonstration to be held here during July, and it is expected several thousand old warriors will be in attendance.

A Pioneer Dead.

Cobourg, Nov. 4.—There passed away at Presque Isle Point, near Brighton, a pioneer of Northumberland County, William Mason. Mr. Mason was born in Wales and when six years of age came with his parents to this country and settled on a farm, the site of which is now Victoria Park, Toronto. It is stated that Mr Mason put the first load of gravel on the Kingston-Toronto road.

Crushed In His Skull.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 4.—Arthur Lenahan, laborer, in the employ of the Clifton Sand and Gravel Co., of Stamford, was probably fatally hurt when the drum pin on which he was working flew out of its socket and let the derrick arm come down on the run. The steel cap of the arm struck Lenahan squarely on the head, crushing in a circular piece of the skull three inches in diameter. The man was brought to the hospital here, where Drs. Kellan, Wilson and McGarry trepaned his skull. Lenahan has not yet regained consciousness.

Mrs. Thornley Is President.

Owen Sound, Nov. 4.—At yesterday morning's session of the W. C. T. U. convention, Mrs. S. G. E. McKee of Barrie, president for ten years, intimated her intention of retiring, and was elected honorary president, Mrs. M. R. Thornley of London being elected president in her stead. Mrs. E. A. Stevens, Toronto, remains vice-president; Mrs. H. M. Detlor, North Bay, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. E. Irwin, Toronto, recording secretary; Mrs. B. O. Britton, treasurer; Miss Garrett, Toronto, secretary.

Big Mail From Britain.

London, Nov. 4.—The Postmaster-General's report shows the weight of letters and postcards despatched to Canada and Newfoundland in 1909-10 to be 433,000 pounds; circulars, book packets and newspapers, 4,589,000 pounds, while there was received 333,000 pounds and 1,020,000 pounds, respectively.

The number of parcels despatched was 314,731, received 121,071. The "C.D.D." system is rapidly fostering the trade within the Empire of small articles.

NATIONALIST WINS CONTEST

Opposition of Frenchmen to the Naval Program as Result of Inflammatory Speeches of Nationalist Orators Is Cause of a Majority of 200 For Gilbert—English Speaking Voters Went Against Laurier.

VICTORIAVILLE, Nov. 4.—The Nationalist candidate in yesterday's election is head of the Liberal candidate by a majority of about 200.

All predictions of the vote proved wrong. In neither Drummond or Arthabasca did the Government secure a majority. Drummond, that traditional home of Liberalism, made a volte face. Instead of the hoped for 500 majority for Perrault, it gave 80 for Gilbert. Arthabasca went about as expected, giving 125 for Gilbert. These figures, however, will be considerably altered when the official returns come in from the widely-scattered polling districts.

One of the great surprises of the election was the English-speaking vote. There are about 500 English speaking electors in the riding, and it was thought that the impassioned anti-imperialist appeals of the Nationalists would have turned these solidly to the Liberal banner, but this was not the case, and apparently the majority of them voted as they were used to, against the Government.

Of the two recognized English-speaking divisions, Tingwick gave a majority of 9 for Perrault, while Stremi gave a plurality of 26 for Gilbert. Alverton, which is largely English, gave only 19 for Perrault.

Arthabaskaville itself, the Premier's home, furnished another surprise, and gave a majority of 25 for Perrault, the first time since 1877 that the parish has given a Liberal majority.

No real analysis of the vote can as yet be given, owing to incomplete figures. Straggling returns from various districts show a considerable variation from the telephonic figures, it being reported that Tingwick gave 55 majority for Perrault, instead of 9, as first reported.

From the start, Gilbert took the lead, Victoriaville giving him a majority of 47. Then this grew, with nearby divisions, to close upon 200. The results were received in silence, everybody looking to Drummondville to offset this Arthabasca vote. But as the returns kept coming over the wire, it became apparent that this old-time Liberal county had changed, and long before the final returns were received, the managers of the Liberal campaign stated they had met defeat, and that all that was left was to figure Gilbert's majority.

If there was no enthusiasm exhibited during the day, the pentup feelings of the Nationalists found ample expression last night, when Gilbert, the victorious candidate, with Messrs. Lavergne and Sevigny of Quebec, arrived here from Arthabaskaville.

An impromptu meeting was arranged, at which religion and politics were oddly mixed, Gilbert calling upon the audience to sing "Veni Creator" as a psalm of thanksgiving for victory, and the audience caught the idea, and sang the ancient chant with resonant vigor.

The Nationalist leaders were met at the station by a big crowd, headed by the town band, and escorted to the town hall, which resounded with uproarious cheers.

Gilbert was cheered to the echo, and in opening said it had been a victory of David over Goliath, with his friends as the real heroes. It was, he said, a providential victory, for which they should thank God. He called for "Veni Creator," after which "O, Canada" was sung with equal enthusiasm.

A Rap at Toronto.

London, Nov. 4. (C.A.P. Cable.)—Sir Alfred Mond, in a lengthy interview in The Morning Leader, said the people of England ought not to take their views of Canada from Toronto, the headquarters of the Conservative protectionist party.

Sir Alfred Mond found in the eastern part of Canada relatively little known of the strength of the movement in the west towards free trade, and yet he was surprised at the number of free traders even in the east.

He was still more surprised at the fact that the leading and most influential newspapers in the east were free trade papers.

The Morning Post says it is now realized that the vociferous assertion here of a sweeping free trade agitation in Canada is a record achievement of political bunkum. The typical pillar of the glorious cause of Mond.

Schoolboys Strike.

Windsor, Nov. 4.—Peculiar conditions arose in Park street school, this city, during the absence of Principal Downey from the city for a few days. Twelve boys went on strike, and trouble is said to have occurred because a substitute engaged to fill Mr. Downey's place during his absence was a Catholic teacher.

Mr. Downey returned and took charge of his class yesterday, and all the twelve strikers are also back but Inspector Mead says he will punish them for their action.

Canadian Nurse Dead.

Detroit, Nov. 4.—Miss Mary E. Feenan, a Canadian girl, and a graduate nurse of St. Mary's Hospital, Detroit is dead here, a sacrifice to the dangers of her profession. She contracted typhoid fever three weeks ago while caring for a patient. Miss Feenan was a daughter of Timothy Feenan of Tilbury, Ont.

GRAHAM AT HOME.

Minister of Railways Talks of Toronto-Ottawa Line.

Brockville, Nov. 4.—Hon. G. P. Graham, the Minister of Railways and Canals, was in the home of his friends last night, when he spoke to the Young Liberals' Club. The Minister traversed a wide range of political subjects, dealing with the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Hudson Bay Railway, the Georgian Bay Canal scheme, the enlargement of the Canadian canal system, the deepening of the harbors, etc.

All these projects, he argued, were necessary to keep pace with the rapid development of Canada, and the large expenditures which they entailed he stoutly defended. He dealt minutely with his railway policy, and intimated that at its present rate of construction the Canadian Northern would class with the C.P.R. and the G.T.P. in becoming a transcontinental line.

Mr. Graham took credit for helping his constituency in the Canadian Northern acquiring the Brockville, Westport and Northwestern Railway, and he threw out the hint that in the not distant future the Grand Trunk would have direct communication of its own between Ottawa and Toronto through Brockville. He spoke in the strain of a man having some inside information without imparting details.

He also took a fling at the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, saying the commission never made a genuine offer of cheap power to Eastern Ontario. This section of the country, if the Minister is sincere, would be given redress and an opportunity of competing with Western Ontario by the powers that be at Ottawa, as he is at present working out a project by which Eastern Ontario will get all the power it needs for manufacturing purposes at a small cost.

Starved Wife and Baby.

London, Ont., Nov. 4.—Thos. James Bates, already convicted of illtreating his wife and also neglecting his baby, James Bates, aged four months, and that a child had died of malnutrition and starvation, was brought out before Coroner Dr. McEachren and a jury last night. Mrs. Bates was brought from Hamilton by the crown to testify, and the latter also gave evidence. He is the wife.

No Power For Tests.

Guelph, Nov. 4.—A hitch is said to have occurred between Guelph and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission office in Toronto. Manager Henry would not issue some tests which he has commenced, and which appear to be proceeding satisfactory, but the official has not furnished the power until the city is ready to make permanent use of it.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"He finds you enigmatic! You become engaged to a man one day, and you leave him the next without apparent reason."

She was obviously disturbed. A slight wave of trouble passed over her face. Her eyes failed to meet mine.

"That I cannot altogether explain to you," she said. "There are reasons why I should come, but apart from them this place is very dear to me. I think that whenever anything has happened to me I have wanted to be here. You are a man, and you will not altogether understand this."

"Why not?" I protested. "We, too, have our sentiment, the sentiment of places as well as of people. If I could choose where to die I think that it would be here, with my windows wide open and the roar of the incoming tide in my ears."

"For a young man," she remarked, looking across at me, "I should consider you rather a morbid person."

"There are times," I answered, "when I feel inclined to agree with you. To-night is one of them."

"That," she said coolly, "is unfortunate. You have been over-working."

"I am worried by a problem," I told her. "Tell me, are you a great believer in the sanctity of human life?"

"What a question!" she murmured. "My own life, at any rate, seems to me to be a terribly important thing."

"Suppose you had a friend," I said, "who was one night attacked in a quiet spot by a man who sought his life, say, for the purpose of robbery. Your friend was the stronger and easily defended himself. Then he saw that his antagonist was a man of ill repute, an evildoer, a man whose presence upon the earth did good to no one. So he took him by the throat and deliberately crushed the life out of him. Was your friend a murderer?"

She smiled at me—that quiet, introspective smile which I knew so well.

"Does the end justify the means? No, of course not. I should have been very sorry for my friend; but if indeed there is a Creator, it is He alone who has power to take back what He has given."

"Your friend, then——"

"Don't call him that!"

I rose up and moved towards the door. I think that she saw something in my face which checked any attempt she might have made to detain me.

"You must forgive me," I said. "I cannot stay."

She said nothing. I looked back at her from the door. Her eyes were fixed upon me, a little distended, full of mute questioning. I only shook my head. So I left her and passed out into the night.

CHAPTER XVII.

MORE TREACHERY.

There followed for me a period of unremitting hard work, days during which I never left my desk save at such hours when I knew that the chances of meeting any one scarcely existed. Several times I saw Lady Angel from my window on the sands below, threading her way across the marshes to the sea. Once she passed my window very slowly, and with a quick, backward glance as she turned to ascend the cliff. But I sat still with clenched teeth. I had nailed down my resolutions. I had determined to hold fast to such threads of my common sense as remained. Only in the night time when sleep cocked me and all hope of escape was futile, was I forced to grapple with this newborn monster of folly. It drove me up across the Park to where the house black and lightless rose a dark incongruous mass above the trees, down to the sea, where the wind came booming across the bare country northwards, and the spray leaped white and phosphorescent into the night like flakes of wind-hurled snow. I stood as close to the sea as I dared, and I prayed. Once I saw morning lighten the mass of clouds eastwards, and the grey dawn break over the empty waters. I heard the winds die away, and I watched the sea grow calm. Far across on the horizon there was a faint glimmer of cold sunlight. Then I went back to my broken rest. It was my solitude in those days, which drove me to seek peace or some measure of it from these things.

At last a break came, a summons to London to a meeting of the Council. I was just able to catch my train and reach the War Office at the appointed time. There were two hours of important work, and I noticed a general air of gravity on the faces of every one present. After it was over Ray came to my side.

"Ducaine," he said, "Lord Chelsford wishes to speak to you for a few moments. Come this way."

He led me into a small, barely-furnished room, with high windows and only one door. It was empty when we entered it. Ray looked at me as he closed the door, and I fancied that for him his expression was not unfriendly.

"Ducaine," he said, "there has been some more of this damned leakage. Chelsford will ask you questions. Answer him simply, but tell him everything—everything, you understand."

"I should not dream of any concealment," I answered.

"Of course not! But it is possible. Ah!"

He broke off and remained listening. There was the sound of a quick foot-step in the hall.

"Now you will understand what I mean," he whispered. "Remember!"

It was not Chelsford, but the Duke, who entered and greeted me cordially. With a farewell nod to me Ray disappeared. The Duke looked round and watched him close the door. Then he turned to me.

"Ducaine," he said, "a copy of our proposed camp at Winchester, and the fortifications on Beller's Hill, has reached Paris."

"Your Grace," I answered, "it was I who pointed out to you that our papers dealing with those matters had been tampered with. I am waiting now to be cross-questioned by Lord Chelsford. I have done all that is humanly possible. It goes without saying that my resignation is yours whenever you choose to ask for it."

The Duke sat down and looked at me thoughtfully.

"Ducaine," he said, "I believe in you."

I drew a little breath of relief. The Duke was a hard man and a man of few words. I felt that in making that speech he had departed a great deal from his usual course of action, and I knew that he meant it.

"I am very much obliged to your Grace," I answered.

"I think," he continued, "that Lord Chelsford and in fact all the others are inclined to accept you on my estimate. We all of us feel that we are victims of some unique and very marvellous pieces of roguery on the part of some one or another. I believe myself that we are on the eve of a discovery."

"Thank Heaven!" I murmured.

"We shall only succeed in unravelling this mystery," the Duke continued deliberately, "by very cautious and delicate manœuvring. I have an idea which I propose to carry out. But its success depends largely upon you."

"Upon me?" I repeated, amazed.

"Exactly! Upon your common sense and judgment."

The Duke paused to listen for a moment. Then he continued, speaking very slowly, and leaning over towards me.

"Lord Chelsford proposes for his own satisfaction to cross-examine you. It occurs to me that you will probably tell him of your fancied disturbance of those papers in the safe, and of your little adventure with the Prince of Malors."

I looked at him in surprise.

"Have they not all been told of this?" I asked.

"No."

There was a moment's dead silence. I was a little staggered. The Duke remained imperturbable.

"They have not been told," he repeated. "No one has been told. The matter was one for my discretion, and I exercised it."

There seemed to be no remark which I could make, so I kept silence.

"We have discussed this matter before," the Duke said, "and my firm conviction is that you were mistaken. That safe could only have been opened by yourself, Ray, or myself. I think I am justified in saying that neither of us did open it."

"Nevertheless that safe was opened," I objected. "Those were the very papers, copies of which have found their way to Paris."

"Exactly," the Duke answered. "Only you must remember that every member of the Board was sufficiently acquainted with their contents to have sent those particulars to Paris, without opening the safe for a further investigation of them. Any statement of your suspicion would only result in attention being diverted from the proper quarters to members of my household. I believe that even if you are right, even if those papers were disturbed, it was done simply to throw dust in your eyes. Do you follow me?"

"Yes, your Grace," I answered.

"Lord Chelsford, if you were able to convince him, would most certainly be misled in this direction. That is why I have kept your report to myself. That is why my advice to you now is to say nothing about your imagined displacement of those papers. That is my advice. You understand."

"Yes, your Grace," I repeated.

"With regard to the Prince of Malors," the Duke continued, "my firm conviction is that you were mistaken. Malors is not a politician. He has nothing whatever to gain or lose in this matter. He is a member of one of the most ancient houses of Europe, a house which, for generations, has been closely connected with my own. I absolutely decline to believe that whilst under my roof a Malors could lower himself to the level of a common spy. Such an accusation brought against him would be regarded as a blot upon my hospitality. Further, it would mean the breaking off of our ancient ties of friendship. I am very anxious, therefore, that you should bring yourself to accept my view as to this episode also."

"Your Grace," I answered, "you ask me very hard things."

He looked at me with his clear, cold eyes.

"Surely not too hard, Mr. Ducaine," he said. "I ask you to accept my judgment. Consider for a moment. You are a young man, little more than a boy. I for forty years have been a servant of my country, both in the field and as a lawmaker. I am a Cabinet Minister. I have a life-long experience of men and their ways. My judgment in this matter is that you were mistaken, and much mischief is likely to ensue if the Prince of Malors should find himself an object of suspicion amongst us."

"Your Grace," I said, "forgive me, but why do you not say those things to the Board, or to Lord Chelsford and Colonel Ray after they have heard my story?"

"Because," the Duke answered, "I have no confidence in the judgment of either of them. Both in their way are excellent men, but they are of the new generation, who do not probe beneath the surface, who form their opinions only from the obvious. It is possible that after hearing your story they might consider the problem solved. I am, at any rate, convinced that they would commence a search for its solution in altogether wrong quarters."

"Your Grace," I said firmly, "I am very sorry indeed that I cannot take your advice. I think it most important that Lord Chelsford should know that those papers were tampered with. And as regards the Prince of Malors, whatever his motive has been, I discovered him in the act of perusing the documents relating to the submarine of Portsmouth. I cannot possibly withhold my knowledge of these things from Lord Chelsford. In fact I think it is most important that he should know of them."

The Duke rose slowly to his feet. He showed no sign of anger.

"If you prefer your own judgment to mine, Mr. Ducaine," he said, "I have no more to say. I have taken you into my confidence, and I have endeavoured to show you your most politic course of behaviour. If your views are so far opposed, you must not consider it an injustice if I decide that a person of more judgment is required successfully to conduct the duties of secretary to the Council."

"I can only thank your Grace for your past kindness," I answered with sinking heart.

He looked across at me with still cold eyes.

"Do not misunderstand me," he said. "I do not dismiss you. I shall leave that to the Board. If my colleagues are favourably disposed towards you I shall not interfere. Only so far as I am concerned you must take your chance."

"I quite understand your Grace," I declared. "I think that you are treating me very fairly."

The Duke leaned back in his chair. "Here they come!" he remarked.

CHAPTER XVIII.

IN WHICH I SPEAK OUT.

The door was thrown open. Lord Chelsford and Colonel Ray entered together. The Commander-in-Chief accompanied them, and there was also present a person who sat a little apart from the others and who I learned afterwards was a high official in the secret service. More than ever, perhaps, I realized at that moment in the presence of these men the strangeness of the events which for a short space of time, at any rate, had brought me into association with persons and happenings of such importance.

Lord Chelsford seated himself at the open desk opposite to the Duke. As was his custom, he wasted no time in preliminaries.

"We wish for a few minutes' conversation with you, Mr. Ducaine," he said, "on the subject of this recent leakage of news concerning our proceedings on the Council of Defence. I need not tell you that the subject is a very serious one."

"I quite appreciate its importance, sir," I answered.

"The particular documents of which we have news from Paris," Lord Chelsford continued, "are those having reference to the proposed camp at Winchester and the subway at Portsmouth. I understand, Mr. Ducaine, that these were drafted by you, and placed in a safe in the library of Rowchester on the evening of the eighteenth of this month."

"That is so, sir," I answered. "And early the next morning I reported to the Duke that the papers had been tampered with."

There was a dead silence for several moments. Lord Chelsford glanced at the Duke, who sat there imperturbable with a chill, mirthless smile at the corner of his lips. Then he looked again at me as though he had not heard aright.

"Will you kindly repeat that, Mr. Ducaine?" he said.

"Certainly, sir," I answered. "I had occasion to go to the safe again early on the morning of the nineteenth, and I saw at once that the documents in question had been tampered with. I reported the matter at once to his Grace."

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the short course recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

A MAKER OF THE BOOK OF LIFE.

A Visit to Abraham Cahan, Who Is the Father Confessor, the Court of Last Resort of the Marvellous East Side.

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

BY GARNET WARREN.

New York, Saturday.—

NEWSPAPERS are scenarios of the dramas of life. They are the short records of tragedies and comedies which are true. What we know as large metropolitan dailies contain many of them. The newspapers of the east side contain more. Why?

"Because," said Mr. Abraham Cahan, the editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, "men are greater in numbers and emotions here. The crowded and changing conditions of east side life intensify effects; and the Jewish race is essentially dramatic."

Mr. Cahan himself is about forty years old—nervous, alert, quick moving, an obvious dynamo of energy. He is indeed a remarkable man. A novelist of distinction, a contributor to the highest class of American magazines and with a reportorial experience upon American newspapers, he deliberately stepped out of that arena eight years ago to conduct a small newspaper on the east side because he conceived the work to be done there was the more vital.

I visited him recently, being curious as to the duties of an east side editor. I wondered wherein he differed from his more decorative brethren of a great daily.

"In many things," commenced Mr. Cahan, with a slightly foreign accent, "but chiefly in his opportunities for studying humanity direct. In the great daily the editor is exactly—an editor. On the east side he is an editor, a rabbi, a lawgiver, a sympathizer and a friend. He must be all these, in fact, if he would be an editor; for the east side is, above all things, human."

Mr. Cahan's speech is a duplicate of his appearance—eager, quick moving, tense.

"First tell me something about the organization of the typical east side newspaper," I said; "something about its contents and makeup now."

"So far as news is concerned," said Mr. Cahan, laughing, "I'm afraid we're a rather negligible quantity. Our special correspondent is mostly the office boy, who buys the last edition from the news stands. In fact, we mostly 'lift' what news we print—although we always credit the newspaper we steal from," he added, conscientiously.

"You see," he went on, "the most essential point of difference is necessitated by our readers. The Jewish east sider is more purely literary in his taste than the average reader of the American daily. The Jew is less interested in things than in theories. He likes discussions, debates, essays, poems—things, in fact, which are not news. Sporting pages do not interest him. We, accordingly, carry each day a couple of pages of what you would term 'special articles,' although they are different kinds of special articles from those which your readers like. We carry lots of translations of the most famous foreign literary work. We carry criticisms and criticisms of our criticisms. In fact, the Jewish reader considers it his particular privilege to criticise original articles which we print, to criticise them both from the point of view of the story and the point of view of art. He has, indeed, a trained analytical faculty which the average American reader does not possess."

"Then, generally, the journalistic methods are quite different from those of—the others."

I vaguely indicated an uptown direction.

"Oh, quite," said Mr. Cahan, smiling, and then, ruminating, "Where shall I begin?"

The Human Element.

"Well, the great point of difference is the human one," said Mr. Cahan. "We are brought into more intimate touch with people than you are. You merely touch the facts. We have to touch the facts and the hearts and the minds. We've got to make the east side people feel that they're not only a newspaper, but that the newspaper is kin to them, part of their lives and of themselves. In fact," he concluded more colloquially, "you've got to help your reader out."

"In such a manner as?"

Mr. Cahan crossed his feet—feet covered with those elastic sided boots which are as much a part of the great east side as the strange, mystic characters written upon the paper between us.

"Well, the gallery of deserting husbands," he volunteered. "You see the changed and changing conditions of life here tend sometimes to lessen moral responsibility. Men desert their wives. The wives come to us with descriptions and photographs and we publish them. That's what we call the 'Gallery of Husbands.' We get letters from all over the country from people who recognize the men.

"'That fellow's here at such and such an address,' one will say. So we get the husbands. They come then and state their case. They usually say they can't live with their wives. 'That isn't necessary,' we say, 'but you must support them.'

"Then wives come," he continued, "who want husbands discovered. There was one here yesterday. She had a pretty little girl with her, four years old. 'Please come back,' she wrote. 'Your little Becky's here crying for her papa. She sent you these kisses with her own hand.'

"The child put little crosses at the bottom of the letter. Then the woman said: 'He's crazy for that child. When he sees that he'll break his heart.'"

Mr. Cahan rose and looked at his watch. "I'm afraid you're rather late," said he.

He looked out of the door. "Between two and four each day," he continued, "people come here for advice, but I'm afraid they're all gone today."

There was one woman there, however, shawled, dark, typical of the east side. Mr. Cahan approached her. The woman spoke eagerly, with little stiff gesticulations. Mr. Cahan shook his head. She spoke again, gesticulated again. Mr. Cahan shook his head once more. Then he commenced to speak. He spoke for five minutes, perhaps. She listened at first without any indication of feeling; then, nodding energetically many times, arose and went. Mr. Cahan followed her to the stairs and stood over to her. She answered, nodding energetically still.

"That woman's husband," said he, "left her two years ago. She had not heard from him. He took the $500 which they had saved. He left without a word. Yesterday he wrote, from Argentina, saying that he wanted her to come to him. He said that he loved her and couldn't do without her. He didn't send any money, but she wants to go; says she loves him yet. I told her not to go."

"Why?" I asked.

"Well," he said, "business isn't very good for the stranger in Argentina, but there's a large white slave trade down there. This man may want to traffic in her. I told her that. 'If he loves you,' I said, 'he'll be willing to come to you. Tell him you'll forgive him if he comes here to you, but don't go to him. If he won't he doesn't love you.' That got her. So she's going to write as I suggested."

The Family Secrets.

He led the way back into his little office, with the single desk and the two chairs to relieve it of its bareness.

"Another feature which would be novel to the ordinary American reader is the family discussions which we print. These are very popular on the east side. A man and his wife quarrel, for instance. The man wants to give up the store, the wife wants to retain it. They can't agree. 'Well, we'll write to the Forward,' says one, 'and let it judge.' So the man writes a letter telling his reasons for wanting to give up the store and the wife writes her reasons for wanting to keep it. We publish both letters. And the remarkable thing about us in letters is that there are seldom assertions and almost invariably arguments. When the thing has been thoroughly ventilated we decide, and everybody invariably accepts the decision. The Jew regards his newspaper as Englishmen sometimes regard theirs. He invests it with some of the qualities of a pulpit utterance."

"And some of the dramatic problems which you are called upon to solve as editor and humanitarian in general?" I asked.

Mr. ABRAHAM CAHAN

"Between Two and Four Each Day," He Continued, "People Come Here for Advice"

"There was one in particularly a few days ago," said he, without hesitation. "The man was intelligent and about forty-five. He was poorly dressed. He came in here to find out whether it was permissible for him to marry a deaf mute."

"You have a wide scope for advice," I suggested.

"The circumstances were these," continued Mr. Cahan. "The girl was the daughter of a Hebrew who had succeeded. He was worth about $60,000. The daughter, being deaf and mute, found it impossible to marry. The father, wishing to settle her in life, offered $10,000 with her as a dowry. Here was the problem of the man who came to me:—

"'I'm a failure in life,' he said. 'I tried peddling and failed. I tried keeping a little store and failed. I tried as salesman and failed. I am very poor. I make only $5 a week. There is nothing before me. Now, here is this $10,000 offered if I will only marry this girl. I feel that I ought to take it. But I have a doubt in me; so I came to you.'

"Well, we told him that he ought not to take it. 'You would not love her,' we said. 'It would be wrong.'

"He looked out of the window which you see and pointed to the thousands of women sitting there in the park opposite.

"'Do you mean to say that all those women married for love? No; they married for homes. They made marriages of convenience, and yet they are good wives. The rich do it every day. I would be a good husband—I promise you that—once I married her. Is not a marriage justified by other things than love? A man is lonely, say. His nature is becoming warped by solitude. Is he not justified in marrying for association? Whether you speak by mouth or fingers—it is the same. Intelligent association is what you need.'

"'It would be selling yourself,' I insisted. 'You are marrying her for her $10,000. You are selling yourself as much as the woman in the street. Failure or no failure, a man should not sell himself for money.'

"Well, he went away and said that he wouldn't do it," said Mr. Cahan. "An argument like that might seem ineffective if used with the ordinary man, but the Jew of the east side has a very deep feeling of responsibility to his inmost ideals."

The Book of Life.

Mr. Cahan paused and excused himself for a moment while he went to another silent, shawled figure which waited patiently on a chair at the end of the large room where men wrote at desks. He spoke with her for five minutes and returned.

"But our most striking feature" he remarked in continuation, "if you like to call it that, is 'The Book of Life.' It is made of letters from the people, which tell their problems, speak their tragedies. We print three columns of these a day. We give the people advice if they want it. It has, perhaps, been due as much to this as anything that we have grown so. We get thirty of these letters a day, and select about three from them."

"How did you induce them to understand what you wanted at first?"

"Well, it was difficult," he answered. "I addressed a letter to the people in the first place. I said:—'You have life. Give it to us. There are great tragedies and comedies of life in your tenement houses. If I could tear the roofs from them I could see those tragedies and comedies; but I can't. You must help me to know.'

"Well, at first they couldn't understand. They sent in long letters with those artificial climaxes for which the magazines have such tender regard—exaggerated emotions, with no simplicity, no truth. So I tried again. I wrote a letter myself. It was an artificial egg in the editorial hencoop to induce the real kind. Then the stream commenced to pour in—letters throbbing with pain; weighted with the primal burdens of men and women—problems of living humanity written in tears."

Mr. Cahan turned to a file. "Here it is, you see." He indicated the page, which to me was an unintelligibility. "Here is one," he said, formulating the skeleton of it slowly.

"He loves a girl. He is a cripple. He is conscious of his deformity and is ashamed to speak to her. The others understand and laugh at him so that he is ashamed to show himself in the street. He hides himself in his room. He says that he does not know what to do. He asks us."

Mr. Cahan's moving finger passed along.

"Here is a boarder who lived in a family and quarrelled with the woman. That was a year ago. He left and started a rumor that she was unfaithful to her husband. Now his conscience bothers him. He is sorry. 'I hate myself,' he says. 'I want you to publish this woman's name and print that I call myself a liar. This woman was a good woman. I was only angry and I lied.'"

"In fact," continued Mr. Cahan, "it is remarkable what a part conscience plays here. There was a letter the other day from a man who bought some fake jewelry for a dollar or so and sold it to a woman for fifty. You know." Mr. Cahan pantomimed the man who comes up in the street with the furtive air and the piece of jewelry concealed beneath his coat. "Well, the man went away and prospered. Now he's worth $10,000 and his conscience bothers him. He wants to find the woman so that he can give back the $50. He says that if she will name some little incident connected with the sale he will send it back. He feels bad."

Mr. Cahan consulted the files again.

"Here's a woman who had her watch stolen," he went on. "She knows the man who stole it. He is her friend. She likes and respects him. He is a good man and not a thief, she writes. He was only tempted, for he is very, very poor. She wants him to know that this is how she feels. She wants her watch back, but she does not want to hurt his feelings. She knows he has pawned it. 'Let him only leave the ticket in some place in which I can get it,' she says, 'and it will be all right. Then let him come to me just as he always did. Let him not be ashamed. I will not remind him of it—not in a look or a word. It will be just as if I did not know. Just let him leave the ticket at the place.'"

He turned over the files. "Here is another one," he said. "This is from a woman. She and her husband lived happily up to a year ago. Then he began to conceive a suspicion that she was saving money secretly. He would search in her stockings. He is always on the hunt for money in unlikely places—places in which he thinks she might have hidden it. She cannot convince him that she is not saving any. It is a source of misery to both of them."

He turned over pages, pages—each a chapter in his Book of Life. "Here is a girl in love with a man twenty years her senior. They were friends in the old country. They worked together. Her love is based upon affection and esteem, but she doubts her heart. Her head tells her that there is too great a disparity in ages. Yet she is lonely and sure of his affection. He is so good to her—so tender. What shall she do?

"Here is a man who had to fly from Germany. He is successful here. Yet the yearning is strong in him to see the places that he knew when he was young. He knows that he will be arrested and imprisoned if he goes, yet he seems unable to stop himself. He asks us to help him."

And so Mr. Cahan continued. The dramas of the lives of the poor came with the prodigality of a magician with a magic hat. There were far more than I could use. So I told him—this man who had called them forth—thanked him and went. And as I stood at the head of the stairs I stepped aside for three shawled women.

Aethma and Consumption

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey Gave Health and Strength When All Else Failed. It Made Mr. Nash Feel Like a New Man.

He recently wrote: "A year ago I caught a severe cold while working. I coughed all the time. My doctor said I had consumption and asthma; he gave me some medicine, which did me no good. I saw your advertisement in the paper, and decided to try your medicine. It has done me much good, and has given me lots of strength. I am sure it will cure me. I am still taking Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey and I recommend it to my friends."—James W. Nash, Cottageville, Ky.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is a wonderful remedy for all diseases of the throat, lungs, stomach and weakened conditions of the body, brain and nerves. It builds new tissue, quickens the circulation and aids in driving out all disease germs. It is prescribed by doctors and is recognized as a family medicine everywhere.

All grocers and liquor dealers, or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. Refuse substitutes and imitations; they are impure and dangerous. Send for medical booklet and doctor's advice, both sent free.

ADVANTAGE OF COURSE OF INSTRUCTION AT THE DAIRY SCHOOLS

From Farm and Dairy.

As the winter season of 1911 approaches, we desire to call the attention of cheesemakers and buttermakers to the advantage of a course of instruction and study at the Dairy Schools. Never was it so necessary for factory and creamery managers to be thoroughly posted in all the details of management and the manufacturing process. According to the law recently passed by the legislature of Ontario, it becomes absolutely necessary beginning with January 1911, for all factory and creamery managers to have certificates of qualification.

Makers who have demonstrated their ability as manufacturers of cheese or butter will be given a "Certificate" by the Minister of Agriculture, on or before January 1, 1911. Those who have not had charge of a factory, but who wish to take a position as chief maker in 1911, we would strongly advise to take a Dairy School course at either Guelph or Kingston. While the Department will be prepared to grant Certificates to those who have shown exceptional ability as assistants without requiring them to take a Dairy School course, their chances for a Certificate will be much better by taking instruction, even for a short time, at one of the Dairy Schools. All who have not had full charge of a factory prior to January 1, 1911, will be required to be qualified to test milk by the Babcock method before Certificates will be granted.

No person will be given authority to take charge of a factory, even though he has taken his dairy school course and passed the examinations, without having had at least one year's practical experience as a helper or assistant in a cheese factory or creamery. Those who have had this one year's experience and have taken a satisfactory standing at a dairy school may be given authority by the superintendent of the school concerned to take charge of a factory for one or two years. If during this time they make the necessary reports to the superintendent concerned and demonstrate their ability as makers, to the representative or representatives of the Department, they will be given a regular certificate from the dairy school.

How Nervous Men Get Most Out of Life

(From "Successful Men.")

Every normal minded man wishes to get all he can out of life—but many a man knows that he is falling far short.

The successful man, works, eats and plays with the keenest enjoyment, because his nerves are keenly sensitive. He tastes, hears, sees and feels all with the highest emotions of vigorous, healthy nerves. As a consequence he has stamina, endurance and personal magnetism, which makes those near and dear to him, worship his manliness, chivalry and strenuousness.

Without keen, sensitive, well nourished nerves, such a man would be an object of pity, and not the brilliant success he is. All men should have well-nourished nerves, but if the blood and vital organs do not supply the chemical or substance known as nerve fluid, then the waste of the nerves is not renewed daily and hourly as it should be. The nerves become exhausted, giving rise to such symptoms as trembling hands and limbs, cold feet and hands, melancholia, hysteria, timidity, nervousness, palpitation, pains in the back, headache, languor and weariness at all times. A most valuable nerve treatment, restorative in every sense, is to be found in the following prescription, emanating it is said from a brilliant and successful specialist on nervous ailments.

The treatment can be prepared in the privacy of home and thus causes no one any embarrassment. First get three ounces of syrup of sarsaparilla compound in a six ounce bottle. To this add one ounce of compound fluid balmwort, shake well and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce of tincture cadomene compound (not cardamom) and one ounce of compound essence cardiol. Mix. Shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one when retiring.

It is astonishing to feel the new nerve force, the steadiest nerves, and the control of every muscle in the body after using this. Overworked office men, and the many victims of society's late hours and dissipation will surely find in this the restorative, rejuvenating force they are sorely in need of. The ingredients are used in various prescriptions and any good druggist can supply them.

TO SAVE THEM

From Farm and Dairy.

A German company has undertaken to save the odd 5,000,000 tons of potatoes lost annually in that country through lack of immediate market by desiccating, or drying the vegetable, so as to preserve it in usual form. Pressure, combined with vacuum, is used to withdraw the bulk of the water from the potato, and artificial heat dries the resulting "meal." This meal has one-quarter of the original weight and occupies one-eighth the space. It tastes and smells somewhat like newly made bread. It may be used or kept in this condition for considerable periods. Pressed into cake, it is used for animal feed.

In practice, three and eight-tenths tons of potatoes yield one ton of potato meal, at a cost of about 56 cents a ton. Twelve cents a ton added for pressing makes the cost of the cake 68 cents, which is not high for fodder of such quality. Chemical analysis shows the following percentages of food value: Water, 11.50; fat, 0.31; protein, 3.73; ash, 2.06; fibre, 1.71; carbohydrates, 80.69. The residual liquor, after evaporating, is about 90 per cent, pure albumen, which has a ready market.—Canadian Trade Review.

HAD KIDNEY TROUBLE.

COULD NOT CROSS THE FLOOR PAIN WAS SO GREAT.

Miss Hazel Hess, Winchester Springs, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled with my kidneys for five years. They were so bad, at times, I could not cross the floor for the pain. The doctor could not do me any good and a friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought six boxes and now I have been cured for over four years. I will recommend them to every sufferer."

No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to filter out of the blood are left in the system. Then how important it must be to see to it that this system of sewerage be not clogged up.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a purely vegetable medicine, realizing quick, permanent relief, without any after ill effects. A medicine that will absolutely cure backache and all forms of kidney and bladder trouble.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c. per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WEDDING IN STATION.

Miss Tomlinson and Barnette Are Married Before Police.

Baltimore, Nov. 4.—Thomas Barnette, in custody here on the charge of having burglarized the residence of Howard Kellogg at Buffalo, and Miss Florence Tomlinson of Toronto, were married in the central police station here yesterday.

Barnette and the young woman, who is said to be the daughter of an official of the Grand Trunk Railroad, eloped from Toronto last August, and she believed she had been legally married to him till Wednesday night when, after his arrest, he admitted that he had deceived her with a mock marriage and decided that a minister be sent for to properly wed them.

The girl was arrested with Barnette on the same larceny charge, and both were committed in default of $2,500 each for the action of the Buffalo authorities.

Barnette Had Record.

Toronto, Nov. 4.—Miss Tomlinson's parents declare they both discouraged the attentions of Barnette here, as they had known of his conviction at Woodstock, Ont., for burglary, for which he served a term in the Central Prison.

Union of African States.

Cape Town, Nov. 4. (C.A.P. Cable.)—At the Government House banquet Col. Jameson said that if the solution suggested for the impasse in Britain were successful, they might anticipate the first step towards union of the Empire's five states. He eulogized Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux's settlement of the Asiatic difficulty in Canada.

The Australian Premier said that nothing had occurred in the world's history in recent time which would have greater effect than the union of South Africa. They now had five nations, willing to co-operate in common affairs, united by unseen bonds to see that justice was done to all people.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux aroused enthusiasm by an eloquent speech. He had sent a message to the people of Britain through The London Daily Mail. In South Africa, as in Canada, England was great and generous, knowing that a brave foe makes staunch friends, granted the equality and freedom of self-government of the two races. Canada had been welded into one by the goodwill and mutual forbearance. Obstacles could be as successfully overcome in South Africa, which was bound to play a brilliant part in the history of the greatest Empire the world has ever seen.

Return of Rejected Immigrants.

Ottawa, Nov. 4.—Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior, and W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration, were waited upon yesterday afternoon by a large deputation of American railway men, who came to Ottawa to confer with them in respect to an important matter affecting the administration of the immigration lands.

George G. Foster, K.C., Montreal, general counsel for Canada of the New York Central lines, who introduced the deputation, and several of the railway men explained that the regulation, under which an immigrant rejected at the frontier must be taken back to the place where he purchased his ticket for Canada, was a hardship on United States railways. This was so because under the interstate commerce law a railway cannot carry a passenger free.

Miss Leneve Is Crippen's Heir.

London, Nov. 4. It was stated yesterday that the main point that Dr. Crippen's counsel would make in the appeal during the arguments on Saturday is that during the illness of one of the jurors, the jury was unobserved for two hours. While the trial was suspended in order to administer to the stricken juror, the other 11 men were unwatched.

Dr. Crippen is cheerful and confident. He is confined in the death ward of Pentonville Prison, where he has been visited several times by his former typist and sweetheart, Miss Ethel Leneve, since her acquittal of being an accessory after the fact in the killing of Mrs. Crippen. Crippen eats and sleeps well and his composure astonishes his jailors. He has made his will, leaving everything to Miss Leneve.

Threw Himself Over Bridge.

New York, Nov. 4—William F. Harris, a stationary engineer, became despondent yesterday when he could not find work in order to support his wife and two little children. He walked over to high bridge, climbed upon the parapet and threw himself headlong into the Harlem River, over 100 feet below.

Hugh Williams, a gate tender, rowed out to Harris, caught the drowning and unconscious man and dragged him into the boat. At the hospital the doctors stated that he will recover although he is suffering from concussion of the brain and a number of contusions.

Of Course Not.

Washington, Nov. 4. Mr. Arosemena, the Minister from Panama, saw President Taft at the White House yesterday afternoon regarding a story published in New York yesterday that President Taft and the United States Government favored the annexation of Panama. Mr. Arosemena, after the interview, said he was sending the following cablegram to his Government at Panama:

"With reference to the article published in The New York World to-day, President Taft authorizes me to say that neither he nor the authorities of the United States Government have ever had, or has now, any intention of trying to annex Panama."

When You Feel Cross

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

And Are Easily Worried and Irritated, Chances Are That the Liver is Not Right and You Need

Life is too short to be cross and grouchy. You not only make yourself miserable, but also those about you.

Don't blame others. Blame yourself for not keeping the liver right. When healthy and active the liver filters the poisonous bile from the blood and passes it into the intestines, where it aids the process of digestion and keeps the bowels regular.

But when the liver balks the whole system becomes clogged with a mass of fermenting matter which gives rise to gas in the stomach, [illegible] pains about the heart, and a multitude of annoying symptoms which accompany indigestion and constipation.

There is nothing in the world which will more promptly afford you relief than Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. This statement is true. A trial will convince you. This medicine acts definitely and directly on the liver and bowels and cleanses the whole digestive and excretory system.

Mr. Theo. Bedard, Lac aux Sables, Portneuf county, Que., writes: "I have found Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills the best treatment obtainable for indigestion and impure blood. They cured me of indigestion, from which I suffered for four years. This certificate is given without solicitation, so that others may not waste their money buying medicine of no value when they can get Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, which I am convinced are the best."

VEN. ARCHDEACON WARREN GIVES INSPIRING MESSAGE

In All Saints' Church Last Evening on the Occasion of the Opening of the Sessions of the Rural Deanery.

OPENING SERMON

The Rural Deanery of Durham and Northumberland opened its sessions in All Saints' church last night. Rural Dean, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, had charge of the service and a very eloquent sermon was preached by Venerable Archdeacon Warren. He took his sermon from the 3rd chapter of Philippians, and the 20th verse, "Our Conversation is in Heaven." Archdeacon Warren began by saying: Now brethren, if my mind serves me correctly, there was a time when the Christian mean was filled with the idea that there should be a very great difference between the life of a Christian and a non-Christian. The conviction was impressed more on the minds of our forefathers, than it is on the English speaking people of to-day. It is expressed, and we are still reminded by some that the Christian should not be worldly, and especially the clergy should be free from worldliness. There should not be too close a connection between the people and the world. "Ye are in the world, but ye are not of the world." Let us try to live and not forget it. The history of Protestantism will ever remain that, and will show the great principles of our religion. There is an evil [illegible] world, for what is in the world, but not of the Father." But let us meditate on our relationship with the world. Yet there must be some connection between it and the world, and it is not the world you love. Let it not become too dear or too dear to you. But let your love be for perfection. Love God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and love thy neighbour as thyself. Our Father has told it to us; our affection is also on things that are not of the world, and His words point to what is meant. "Our Hope in life is in heaven."

"Yes, our hope is in heaven, because we were given an ideal. The kingdom of God is an ideal and in our live it must first be an ideal. Blessed are the meek, and blessed are the pure of heart. Bless them that curse you. Pray for the strength we have. For they represent the greatest of ideals that the human mind or heart can meet. Make the ideals with all your heart, and it shall be the light that shall lead you. It does not remain an ideal. We are to accomplish in the memory of Him Church that which we were to do. Our conversation is an ideal. Because it is an ideal world we live in. We need not be ashamed to profess Christianity and to be proud and glad and women. I think no Christian can put as much confidence in the world as anyone else. In this world an ideal will never be perfectly realized.

In closing I may say that we are called here to-day to renew and strengthen the ties that bind us together to the Lord. May the spirit of God ever be purely worshipped within it. Amen.

REVOLTING MURDERS

Examiner Special.

WINNIPEG, NOV. 3. For savage brutality and revolting incident there have been few murders in Winnipeg district to compare with those which were committed north of Teulon and Point Dubois within the last week.

Coroner Inglis, who has been conducting inquests into the death of both victims, returned from the scenes to-day.

At Du Bois the victim was struck down with an axe from behind, a great gash being cut in the back of the neck. Afterwards the murderer, to make his work sure, sunk the blade of the axe into the body of the fallen man with such force that four ribs were smashed through.

In the case of the crime north of Teulon, the man under arrest is alleged to have intimidated the wife of the murdered man during his absence by threatening to shoot her with a rifle if she did not comply with his desires. The victim was thrashing at the time.

Dr. Inglis says that as a result of the murders the whole district is terrorized. He found that almost all the men were away threshing, while the women were left alone in isolated shacks. These women have banded together for protection.

The murdered man met the husband, Conrad Kucsko, in the woods. Both were armed, but Kucsko pulled first. After the shooting the slayer came to Winnipeg and surrendered. At the Point Dubois inquest a verdict of wilful murder was brought in against Antonio Vecsio, or Paluni, who is still at large.

ELECTRIC POWER COMPANY CAN SUPPLY PETERBORO' WITH 30,000 H.P. IF NEEDED

That Peterborough will be able to secure from the Electric Power Company Limited, electrical energy to the extent of 30,000 horse power, was the statement made by Mr. J. H. Larmouth, of Belleville, formerly of Peterborough, to the Examiner. The Electric Power Co., with which the Peterborough Light and Power Company is connected, is a merger of all the power companies and controls all the power along the Trent Canal from Peterborough to Trenton. They have the Healey Falls power with a 76 foot head, the power at Ranney's Fall, a mile below Campbellford, the Seymour Electric Company's plant above Campbellford and all the water powers of that district.

Mr. Larmouth informed the Examiner, that the company intends to centralize the power at Campbellford and have the sub-distribution station there. They intend to run a transmission line from Campbellford to Peterborough, commencing the work in the early spring and will be ready to deliver power to the manufacturers here in eight or nine months.

We will have 30,000 h.p. available" remarked Mr. Larmouth. "Peterborough can have just as much of that as the city wants. It will be the case of first come, first served.

Have you settled upon a price?"

"We will deliver power at $25 per horse power for a twenty-four hour day" was the reply.

The Company has 128 miles of transmission lines built already and send power to Marmora, Stirling, Delora, Sulphide and other towns in that section.

The wider power at Auburn is to be developed by a new plant and it is expected that 3000 horse power can be obtained at this point.

LONGEST PRISON WALL

Special to the Examiner.

ATLANTA, NOV. 4. The concrete wall at the Federal Prison, on which work was begun in 1903, was completed last month. This is said to be the longest prison wall in the built with the exception of the concrete construction that has ever been built with the exception of the concrete bridge work ever which a railroad has been strung across the Florida keys. This wall is 1,300 feet long, or about four-fifths of a mile.

PARTNERS IN CRIME.

The Mail and Empire refers to the Drummond and Athabaska contest as a fight between members of the Liberal family. How is it then, that we find the leaders of the Conservative party taking sides with what it would call one wing of the Liberal party? The Nationalists are not Liberals, for the policy they represent, the empire wrecking and harmony killing policy, is repudiated in toto by Liberals. If as the Mail claims, it is a family quarrel among Liberals, how does it explain the fact that the Conservative party in Quebec sent some of its strongest men to work with the wreckers. Mr. Monk, the political bedfellow of Mr. Bourassa, is yet the Conservative leader in Quebec—he has not yet been formally deposed. Senator Landry and Dr. Paquet of Lotbinière, are regarded as the strongest members of the Conservative party, yet they threw themselves into the fight against British connection and against the idea of Canadian cooperation in imperial defence. It is something new for Conservatives to be working with "Liberals." As to the election result in Drummond and Arthabaska, it is brought about by the cooperation of empire wreckers, and the Conservative party, or a considerable part of it, which joined forces actively and passively, but effectively, in cooperating for the triumph of a policy that aims at the separation of Canada from the empire, the resurrection of the race and creed elements of Canadian disintegration, and the unnamenable evils that attend it. The Mail and Empire and those who think with it, should be happy in having contributed to the result that threatens. They are particeps criminis.

THE DRUMMOND AND ARTHABASKA RESULT.

Entirely apart from any party considerations, the result of the voting in Arthabasca, the election of the Nationalist candidate, Mr. Gilbert, is a national disaster, and a menace to Canadian and Imperial interests. By the united efforts of the Nationalist-Conservative combination the candidate of hostility to British connection and the fomentation of race and creed antagonisms, succeeded in polling a reasonably large majority of the votes. The nominal question at issue was the naval policy of the Government; but the significance of the apparent condemnation of it by the electors is greatly weakened by the fact that it was due to the most scandalous and even bizarre misrepresentations, which would have lost a great deal of effect if there had been time to correct them. The stock-in-trade of the advocates of the Nationalist candidate was the expression of the

AN INCREASE IN SCALE OF FEES CHARGED BY DOCTORS

The following from the Canadian Journal of Medicine and Surgery is under the title "The Higher Cost of Living and the Case for a Reasonable Doctor's Fees":

"The members of the medical profession in Canada, at least a great many of them, are much in the same predicament as were Jefferson, preacher etc., in a Western State, who withdrew from the exercises of the ministry, because the salaries paid them ($500-$700) did not suffice to support a family. In pioneer days a preacher could raise a family on that kind of a salary, but during the past fifteen years things have changed and preachers, many of whom are university graduates, feel compelled, with reluctance no doubt, to forsake the harvest of souls for less connubial but more lucrative employments.

"If members of the medical profession are unwilling to continue practising for the small amount of patronage received they are at liberty to leave the profession; but, unfortunately, there are others, of supposedly equal abilities, ready to take their places. To many matters worse for physicians of any school (regular, homeopathic, or electic—hygiene has cut the ground from beneath their feet. They, the public do a vast amount of self-doctoring, and only call in a physician after the domestic therapeutic armamentarium has proved unavailing.

"There is an ever-expanding horizon opening before the student of the medical sciences and medical literature, and, if the cultivation of science and literature provide a sufficient financial return, there is but little to complain of. Science herself is priceless; of herself a reward exceeding great. But, if the student of medicine [illegible] By getting the nutriment your food contains you are busily strengthened that creates a vicarious condition over the entire human system, making it possible to repel the germs that constantly assail you. Now, according to statement, it is this fact, coupled with other health elements of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, that has given thousands of men and women some seven to five years more life than they would otherwise enjoy.

Duffy's is endorsed and recommended by ministers of the Gospel and prescribed by doctors as the most nourishing, purest, healthgiving, tonic-stimulant and invigorator known to medicine. It keeps every organ of the body in a strong, healthy condition, so as to resist the attacks of germs.

The fact that this popular promoter of long life has qualities to repel disease is one that attracts men and women of all ages.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is a preventive of disease, a cure for lung, throat and lung troubles, and according to the work of a noted New York State physician, is the best stimulant that brings happiness into the home by making well and keeping well.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN UNION.

(Toronto Star)

The Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux counts walking among his recreations. That may explain why he looks almost a decade younger than the forty-four years which he attained on Tuesday. On Friday he will represent Canada at the opening of the first Parliament of United South Africa, and his presence and that of the Duke of Connaught, will give Canadians a double interest in the event.

While the union of the Cape, Natal, Transvaal, and Orange River Colonies resembles in some particulars the federation of Canadian provinces, the form of government adopted by the new dominion overseas has many distinctive features. There are, for instance, no limitations upon the power of the Union Parliament imposed in the interests of subordinate bodies. Apparently the only matters relegated to the authority of the "Provincial Councils," which replace the Colonial Legislatures, are the collection of taxes and the control of elementary education. There will be little talk of provincial rights in the new Union, and much talk of race rights. Only one citizen in three is European or white, yet the natives have the franchise only in Cape Colony.

The most interesting experiment which is embodied in the South African constitution has to do with the breaking of deadlocks between Senate and Assembly. The Senate, composed of forty members, eight appointed and the remainder elected, has the right to reject or amend all bills except money bills, which it may reject, but not amend. The Assembly, however, which is 121 strong, has the right to sit with the Senate and vote with it in case of disagreement, the majority in the united Houses to decide the question at issue.

With the problem of bilingualism prominently before the Canadian people, it is interesting to note that both Dutch and English will be the official languages of the Union, Canada's example in this regard having evidently been thought worthy of adoption. But while over one hundred years elapsed between the British conquest of Canada and the final merging of its mixed races in one great confederation, the union of South Africa has been accomplished just seven years after a protracted war. It is doubtful whether history furnishes a parallel case.

HOW TO LIVE LONG

Through Scientific Observation of the Life of Men and Animals

Now we have a means by which life can healthfully last at least 150 years.

The scientists who claim this have advanced a theory which is based on animal life as it exists in the jungles. Take for instance: An elephant lives for several hundreds of years, parrots have a life of two or three hundred years, and other species of animals enjoy several centuries of active life. Now, if we are advocates of Darwin, who claims that man evolved from apes, the matter is settled. But if our view is contrary, we have but to review history. People formerly lived several of our modern lifetimes.

The trouble is that now we crowd an hour into every minute. The war of commerce creates worry, exposure, stirs up disease germs and thus shortens life.

However, man has been given that which prolongs life. The Duffy Pure Malt Whiskey Co., of Rochester, New York, produce a stimulant that fills the present demand.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is an absolutely pure, gentle and invigorating stimulant and tonic, builds up the nerve tissues, tones up the heart, quickens the circulation, gives power to the brain, strength and elasticity to the muscles and richness to the blood. It brings into action all the vital forces, makes digestion perfect, and enables you to get from the food you eat the nourishment it contains.

UNJUST TO SIR WILFRID.

The Montreal Witness in discussing the race campaign instituted by Bourassa, Monk, etc., takes strong ground against the attempt made by certain Conservative newspapers, to make Sir Wilfrid Laurier responsible for its inauguration or revival. The Witness says:

To represent or to suggest Sir Wilfrid Laurier as an apostle or supporter of sectionalism is to misrepresent and to falsify his political record, and incidentally to impugn most seriously the political intelligence of the people of Canada. Impatience with the spirit of sectionalism, as the great enemy of our national development, is not a new thing in the Dominion; a sure instinct has kept public opinion steadily awake to its manifestations in any quarter. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier's attitude had been sectional in spirit, it is perfectly certain that he would never have been chosen, as he was, by the English members of the Liberal party as their leader, and would have been declared disqualified long before this for the premiership of the country. As a French-Canadian, indeed, he has shared the best aspirations of his race, just as he has splendidly exemplified their noble qualities. But if any characteristic of this political career stands out more clearly than any other, it is surely that, from the beginning onward, he has deliberately followed, like Lafontaine and Cartier before him, the idea of a united Canada, British in its political methods and aspirations. Can any sane man, indeed, acquainted with the facts, deny that it is just because he is not sectional that he is attacked in the Province of Quebec today. What is the "lesson" that the Nationalist leaders talk of teaching him? Is it not this, that their narrow and reactionary provincialism is of more account in their eyes than the development of the Dominion as a whole? History will justify Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the broad spirit and direction of his statesmanship, but in the meantime true Canadians of every nationality should uphold him, with redoubled energy, against the attacks of men who would, above all, overthrow his good work in the promotion of good will and mutual understanding between the races.

The Witness does Sir Wilfrid no more than justice in paying tribute to his life long work of solidifying Canadian citizenship. In the historical category of his services to Canada, this outstanding feature will receive the prominence it merits. The blind partizanship that plays with fire and aims in effect, to kindle anew the flames of race and creed dissension, is assuming an awful responsibility. Extremists in Quebec are no more injurious or hostile to the best interests of the country than the extremists of Ontario or the other provinces. Would a solid Ontario be less deprecable than a solid Quebec? Any section that seeks to divide Canadian citizenship or race and creed lines, is an evil influence in national life.

HAIR CUT AS SHE SLEPT

Special to the Examiner

JEFFERSONVILLE, ILL., NOV. 4 Awakening after an unusually sound night's sleep, Mrs. Letha Derby, of this city, was amazed to find that more than half of her hair had been cut off and carried away during the night.

So deftly was the work done and so careful was the hand that wielded the razor or shears not to touch that part of her hair on which she was sleeping, that Mrs. Derby was not awakened. Her four children, whose ages range from two to fourteen years, were sleeping in the room with her, and not one of them heard a sound.

Mrs. Derby's hair, which was very black, with a few strands of gray, was unusually heavy and reached below her waist.

CAN WOMAN FIX HOME?

Examiner Special.

DENVER, COL., NOV. 4.—Governor Shafroth has been asked to decide whether a husband or his wife has the privilege of fixing the domicile for the couple.

The question arose in connection with a requisition for John T. Walker, a resident of Denver for seventeen years, accused of abandoning his wife, who lives in Detroit, Mich. The action against Mr. Walker was begun by his mother-in-law, Mrs. E. Owens, of Detroit. His daughter, Hazel Walker, aged eight, testified in his favor.

"Mamma wanted to give me away," said the girl. "Papa wanted her to come here with him, but she refused to do so. Mamma knew that papa was going away. Last one Sunday morning when she was not at home we packed up and left."

Mr. Walker said that his wife, during the last seventeen years, had visited Detroit a number of times. He declared that she returned there in 1908 and remained. He visited her in 1909 and asked that she return to Denver.

Benjamin Laska, attorney for Mr. Walker, applied for a writ of habeas corpus to release him from prison.

MATCH IN PARIS IS ARRANGED FOR JOHNSON

NEW YORK, NOV. 3.—Jack Johnson and Joe Jeanette in a finish fight for the heavyweight championship of the world, the battle to be staged in Paris on the night of the Grand Prix, when the greatest number of sport followers attracted by any event in the world is annually assembled in the French capital.

This is the proposition that Dan McKittrick, manager of Joe Jeanette, the negro, who has spent several years in France, to-day put up to Johnson, acting on an offer cabled to him by a syndicate of rich French fight promoters.

"This thing looks as good to me as I am going to make Johnson a personal offer of $25,000 for his end, win, lose or draw," said McKittrick to-day. "These fellows will draw the greatest house that ever looked at a ring side, and believe me it will be one of the grandest ever pulled off, too.

"Joe is the only man in the game who has a show against Johnson, and the champion knows it. They have fought half a dozen times and although Joe hasn't always won Johnson knows he is right there as the best thing in the heavyweight game, with the possible exception of Johnson himself.

"I expect to have Johnson's offer to-morrow and if it is yes, as I hope, the sporting world can look forward to a fight that won't have any doped for aftermath, no matter who wins."

LONGBOAT AND JOHNSON IN A WALKING MATCH

HAMILTON, NOV. 3.—Sol Mintz, manager of Tommy Longboat, the famous Indian, is trying to arrange a match walking race at any distance from ten to twenty miles between Longboat and Jack Johnson.

Longboat has taken to the walking game, and it now forms a large part of his training. On Saturday last he walked the historic bay course against time, and shattered the record of R. B. Harris, one of the founders of the Thanksgiving Day race. Mr. Harris' record was 3.45, and the Indian completed the course in 3.20. Mintz says that Johnson boasted of phenomenal walking stunts while he was training for the Reno match.

McMaster To Referee The Argo-Ottawa Battle

OTTAWA, NOV. 3.—Dr. D. H. Arnold, President of the Ottawas, received to-night a telegram from Mr. Wally Hager, of Montreal, Second Vice-President of the Interprovincial Union, announcing the appointment of officials for Saturday's match with the Argonauts of "Billy" McMaster of Montreal and Russell Britton, of Chinaquoque. Both have consented to act. It is likely that the Argos will enter a kick against McMaster, as it was said after the match at Toronto that they would not again accept him. The decision of Hager, however, is final, and both teams must abide by it although Ottawa hoped to have one of their officials from the Capital.

The Ottawa Executive met to-night and selected the following team: Mc[illegible], fullback; Gerard, Williams and O'Neil, halves; Snelling, quarter; [illegible]mith, McCuaig and Barrymore, [illegible]nge; Phillips, Church, Disney, [illegible]an, Hill and Hickey or McCann, [illegible].

Gerard has a very sore knee and may not be able to take his place. Should Gerard not line up Murray Connolly will go to right half, O'Neil to left and Johnstone to full. The Ottawas held their final practice this afternoon, when all the men were in harness. They are backing themselves with all the money they can get together to turn the tables on Ralph Ripley's team.

TRYING TO REVIVE THE INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

DULUTH, MINN., NOV. 4.—Herculean efforts are being made by magnates here and in nearby cities to boost hockey for the coming season, and it is likely that another International League will be formed, including nearly all the cities of the old league, of which Bruce and Hod Stuart, Fred Taylor, Fred Lake and Riley Hern were the star products.

There is any amount of good players in the West who could be obtained, and if a league is formed there is no fear that it will be a success, as the game is very popular here.

Tommy Hare, of Cobalt, was out here for some time trying to get a league started, and it is possible that by the time the ice is formed everything will be ready for a good season's hockey.

The proposed league will include Duluth, Houghton, Calumet, both the Canadian and American Sooes, and possibly St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Her Face and Body Were Litterly Covered With "BOILS."

Burdock Blood Bitters Cured Them.

Mrs. John H. King, Johnston, N.B., writes:—"Last summer I was very much troubled with boils, and my face and body were literally covered with them. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I got three bottles, and before I had taken all the first one my boils began to go away. I had just taken a few doses out of the last one when they all disappeared. My husband has also used Burdock Blood Bitters with much benefit."

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time, are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and to get rid of them it is necessary to put the blood in good condition, and for this purpose there is nothing to equal that old and tried remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters.

NECK BROKEN BUT HE IS STILL ABLE TO PLAY

Special to the Examiner.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 3.—Although his neck was broken just twelve days ago, [illegible] of the Cincinnati University and Earlham all League Park, Kenneth B. Brooks is back at his studies at Earlham without having lost much in standing, and he wants to play football again, but he is prevented from doing so for the fall at least, by strict orders from his physician. The doctor told him, however, that he could get back into the gridiron game next fall with perfect safety. When Brooks was carried off the field a week ago Saturday, after looking a hard tackle, in which he was last back, the X-Ray showed that one of the cervical vertebrae or neck-bones was out of joint, but not far enough to press upon the spine.

A GOOD ONE

NEW YORK, NOV. 3.—Mr. Knockout Brown is looked upon as the coming welter. He is coming along at a gait that makes him look like a worthy successor to Kid Lavigne, Frank Erne, Terry McGovern, Joe Gans and other notables.

He never refuses to fight and has fought as often as three times a week. He has reached that stage of temperance where he is introduced as "Mister Brown. He won over Joe Bedell, the local lightweight, in ten rounds of furious fighting at the Brooklyn Beach Athletic Club. It was his first appearance in Brooklyn with a boy of any calibre.

To Bedell he met a boy many pounds heavier, but Brown won in the first round and only missed putting Joe away by the narrowest margin. He thrashed "Bud" Robinson of Schenectady, N. Y., a few nights ago. The colored boy fought him ten rounds.

FRANK LEAHY,

Of Dorre, who ran second in The Examiner Junior race on Monday. Leahy was ninth last year. He ran a splendid race against Edwards in this year's contest.

FARM HELP PROBLEM

From Farm and Dairy.

The ideas brought out in the article "The Farm Help Problem" elsewhere in this issue should be noted by every employer of farm labor in this country. Mr. Barnes, of the Extension Service of the Minnesota State College, puts his finger on a vital side of the quest in concerning the farmer's help. Farm and Dairy readers will be well advised to read his article and to treat hired help accordingly if they would solve to a greater extent their farm labor problem.

Ere long thousands of men throughout the country who have been employed on farms for seven or eight months will be set adrift without a job. Many of these men will seek employment in cities, towns and villages where they will find work, and a large percentage of these will be lost ever more to the farm. Good hired help is worthy of any reasonable consideration, and a good hired man is worth retaining.

Rather than allow a hired man of value who has worked well for seven or eight months to drift away, it would be much better to provide work and retain his services for 12 months of the year upon the farm. A comfortable cottage that is a real home for the hired man solves many of the domestic problems as well as the hired help problem on the average farm. A home and steady employment with fair wages appeals to the average man; far-sighted progressive farmers of to-day recognize this fact and provide these things for their help.

METHODS OF FEEDING TURKEYS

From Farm and Dairy.

T. A. Benson, Ontario Co., Ont.

Good results can often be obtained from turkeys by entirely different methods of feeding. Although much depends upon surroundings and circumstances very much more depends upon the feeder. Some poultrymen are able to obtain the best results by adopting the simplest methods, others appear to do equally well only by using more elaborate systems.

By this time of the year the turkeys should have been encouraged to remain nearer the farm buildings and be fed close to and sometimes inside the building. This plan makes it easy eventually to catch them.

The simplest and an exceedingly good feed for turkeys is whole white flint corn. Care must be taken to feed nothing but well seasoned grain. Give a good feed three times a day. The turkeys should not be cooped.

Another method is to feed dough in the morning and corn at night, adding a little condition powder to the dough. Very good results are obtained by feeding a mixture of equal parts oats, cracked corn and whole corn. The oats should be crushed. The object in cracking one part of the corn and crushing the oats is to make the birds take more time to feed.

Great care is necessary in catching turkeys. They are exceedingly nervous and being heavy are often damaged so much in catching as to seriously affect the market price. Take care that they roost in a shed instead of outside on the trees and where there is only sufficient light to see where the birds are when catching them.

Methods of killing and dressing turkeys are the same as that used in the case of chickens, ducks and geese. They should always be dry plucked.

A TORONTO OFFICE

Messrs. McConnell & Fergusson Establish Business Here

Manufacturers and others who are studying the question of publicity will be interested in the announcement that Messrs. McConnell & Fergusson, the well-known advertising agents of London, Ontario, are opening an office in Toronto. They have secured suitable quarters in the new Lumsden building, and it is understood will be ready for business in a few days. The manager of the office will be Mr. James Fisher, a well-known Toronto advertising man. Mr. Fisher has a wide acquaintance in the city and Province, and is splendidly equipped for the work he is undertaking. For the past four years he has been advertising manager of the Hugh C. MacLean publications, while previously he was connected with the Toronto office of another advertising agency. He has also had valuable experience in the editorial and advertising departments of a leading Provincial daily paper.

The progress of the McConnell & Fergusson Agency has been marked. About eight years ago it was established in the city of London, the members of the firm being both young and aggressive Canadians. Mr. J. E. McConnell was for several years advertising manager for the McClary Manufacturing Co., and in that capacity handled with singular ability and success the appropriations of one of Canada's great national advertisers. Mr. M. M. Fergusson was sales manager of one of Canada's largest domestic and exporting lithographing houses, having successfully handled the sales end of the business, both in the office and on the road in Canada and foreign markets.

Since the formation of the agency Messrs. McConnell & Fergusson have gathered about them a complete organization of skilled artists, copy writers, etc., and their services have been utilized by many prominent manufacturers. A few of the accounts for whom they are now handling national campaigns are: The McClary Manufacturing Co., London; Penman's Limited, Paris; Western Canada Flour Mills Co., Limited (Purity Flour), Winnipeg and Toronto; T. H. Estabrooks (Red Rose Tea), St. John, N.B., and Toronto; Frost & Wood, Limited, Smith's Falls; Metal Shingle & Siding Co., Limited, Preston; Stephens Paints, Winnipeg; Waterous Engine Works Co., Brantford; United Soap Co., Montreal; Brantford Roofing Co., Brantford, etc.

A few years ago the firm opened an office in Winnipeg in charge of Mr. C. O. Smith, a move which is said to have been of great advantage to them in studying the Western Canada field and keeping themselves and their clients in close touch with conditions in that great territory. The Toronto office will be another important link in the chain and the proximity of this city to London will give the staff here the advantage of active cooperation with the members of the firm, both of whom are already well known in Toronto.

Queen's Progressive.

Queen's University has opened up for the session, like the rest of the Canadian colleges. Queen's starts its books with an innovation. Down in Kingston they have added a Chair of Canadian History to the college furniture. There is nothing like it in Canada. A chap may go to Toronto or McGill and know less about his own country than when he entered college. You are supposed to have learned the story of Canada in the public school. Queen's is the only college in Canada where you can specialize in Canadian history. Even at Oxford the colonies come in for expert treatment, until this autumn at the hands of Prof. W. L. Grant. He has come to Queen's to do the same work. Prof. Grant is the late Principal Grant's son.

Fight Pictures Seized.

Regina, Nov. 4. A party of Northwest Mounted Police, under Inspector Hefferman, pounced on a local theatre in which pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries prize fight were being exhibited, and seized machines and films. The management of the establishment offered no resistance, of course, and admission charges were refunded at the box office. The raid followed instructions from the department of the Attorney-General, and means that the pictures will not be shown in Saskatchewan.

Winnipeg Water Supply.

Winnipeg, Nov. 4. Manufacturers here have taken a hand in the agitation for a new source of water supply, and have demanded that the present system of artesian wells be abandoned in favor of a visible supply of pure, soft water. They realize that this step cannot be taken hurriedly, and recommend that in the meantime the city authorities arrange to instal an equipment for softening the present supply.

Bitter Toward Grand Trunk.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 4.—Things look rather hopeless here for the Grand Trunk trainmen who lost their jobs at the time of the strike. Fourteen unemployed men have had no ray of hope that they would be given back their old runs. Feeling is bitter towards the railroad, and the men and their sympathizers do not hesitate to say that the road has violated their understanding of the agreement which was instrumental in bringing the strike to a peaceful end. The men declared that they know of no acts of violence that any of their number participated in. This was the only reason given by the road for refusing any striker his old job back again.

Attacked Captain With Knife.

Kingston, Nov. 4.—Michael Divine, a young man and well-known character, was arrested last night. It is alleged that in an altercation Divine attacked Capt. James Oliver with a knife. The latter suffered a bad jab over the right eye and several cuts on the left hand, but his injuries are not very serious.

A Daring Horseman.

The famous John Mytton once galloped full speed over a rabbit warren "to try whether or not his horse would fall." The horse did fall and rolled over Mytton, who, with good luck, got up unhurt. Shortly after he attained his majority Mytton gave a dealer an order for some carriage horses and went to see what the man had got for him. He put one of the lot in as tandem leader to "try" it and with the dealer at his side drove out on the highroad. As they drove Mytton inquired if the horse were a good timber jumper; and, the dealer giving a doubtful answer to a query he did not expect in respect of a harness horse, Mytton instantly said he must "try" him. Forthwith he drove at the turnpike gate which barred the way before him. The horse cleverly cleared it, leaving the wheeler, the gig and its occupants on the take-off side. Wonderful to relate, neither the horse nor the man was hurt. The gig, however, stood in urgent need of repairs.—London Stock Journal.

TO LIVE LIKE "NOAH"

Special to The Examiner.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., NOV. 4.—The advance guard of the "Regenerationists," composed of twelve women and ten men has reached Barstow, and is now temporarily encamped east of the town. John Belmont Judson is the leader. He is an Oxford graduate. The party is bound for Mexico, proposing to take up permanent residence in the little empire recently bought by Michael Cudahy, the Chicago packer. Though now garbed as moderns, the members propose to discard twentieth century dress and ways for those prevailing in the days of Noah.

"We have no quarrel with out fellows," said Judson; "but hope to win them to the simple life by example. The human race is living too fast. All this whirl and bustle, this mad desire to annihilate time and space, has developed the seeds of degeneration in mankind, and the human family is rapidly hurrying toward a frightful cataclysm."

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

There is a certain spot very near home for all of us, to which occasional—say a weekly or at least a monthly visit would be inestimable.

And yet, some of us go there not more than once or twice a year, some of us once or twice in a lifetime, and some of us never.

And that spot is simply the bottom of our hearts.

How often do you go down into the very bottom of your heart?

A little friend of mine was trying to make up her mind about something.

"In the bottom of your heart," I asked, "don't you know that you don't care for him?"

She sat thinking intently for a moment or two.

"Yes," she acknowledged slowly, "in the bottom of my heart, I guess I do not know it. I don't know as I ever went there to find out before."

That's the way with most of us.

We have some important question to decide, and we argue with ourselves, and range disadvantages, and advantages against each other in pitched battle, and get needlessly confused and embroiled, while down in the bottom of our hearts, clear and distinct as the pebbles at the bottom of a crystal well, the true answer lies waiting for us to come and look for it.

To ten men who are honest with other men, I don't believe there is more than one who is thoroughly honest with himself.

We try, self-conceitedly, to judge of other people's motives, but wise is the man that knows even his own motives, I think.

I remember the first time I had a check book. As soon as I got it I wrote out a check for a certain charity. I started to be pleased with myself at my virtuous action, and then I took a trip to the bottom of my heart, and wondered, "Am I doing this wholly for sweet charity's sake, or partly for the pleasure of using my new check book?"

I think the best time to go down to the bottom of your heart is in the morning, just after you wake up, or rather just after you have completely swept away the cobwebs of sleep by your morning bath.

The well is clearest then. At night the sunset glow of the emotionalism, which is so much strongest in most of us at that time, is reflected in it and makes it less crystalline, and the breeze of mental excitement and enthusiasm, which is usually most lively then, ripples and quivers its surface.

But in the morning—the clear, cool, unemotional morning—the will of your inmost self awaits your scrutiny, clear as a crystal, unruffled as a mirror.

Have you any problems to decide?

Have you any subject that demands your very sanest consideration?

If you have, why not see what suggestion lies at the bottom of your heart?

Why not visit the neglected spot to-morrow morning as you dress?

You may not find anything different there from what you know already. And then again, you may find truth itself, undiluted and undisguised. But maybe you don't care much for truth that way. Few people do.

Man In Prison Since He Was Fourteen Tells The Story Of His Life In Jail

Man Who Has Been In Solitary Confinement Since He Was Fourteen, Now Asks In His Own Words for His Liberty.

CRIME WAS DREADFUL

Examiner Special.

BOSTON, NOV. 4.—Jesse H. Pomeroy, in many ways one of the most remarkable prisoners the world ever saw, now serving a life sentence in Charlestown State prison for murder, has written his own story of his crime and his efforts to better his condition shut away from the freedom of the world.

This story, written in his cell with pen and ink through long weary days that lengthened into weeks and months while it was being prepared, was sent to a Boston friend who had become interested in the welfare of the prisoner. It is printed for the first time.

Pomeroy is more than fifty years old. He has been a prisoner since he was fourteen. He is old, bent and marked with prison pallor. The sight of one eye is gone.

DON'T ASK FOR LIBERTY

In his appeal he does not ask for liberty, but for greater privileges in mingling with his fellow convicts. He does not deny his atrocious crimes. Of the one of which he was convicted, the brutal murder of a four-year-old boy, he says:

"Of course, it cannot be denied that the crime was dreadful and that public justice required satisfaction."

Pomeroy, a fourteen-year-old South Boston boy, killed two children, a boy and a girl, after treating them with barbaric cruelties. In Chelsea and South Boston he inveigled other small children into isolated sections, stripped them of their clothing, tied them to trees or upon boards and then beat them until they were unconscious, stuck pins into their tender flesh, and stabbed and jabbed them with knives.

When this boy with the demon heart was finally run down and forced to confess he barely escaped lynching. Only his youth saved him from the hangman's noose.

The best legal counsel have looked into the legality of his conviction and found that from that standpoint there is not the slightest loophole for him to hope. Warden Bridges, in discussing his privileges in the prison, has pointed out that Pomeroy has more freedom than he is entitled to by a strict construction of his sentence.

Pomeroy has been advised to content himself as best a man can whose liberty has been taken away because of his unfitness to have it. He has tried repeatedly to escape. He has refused to work. Yet from a boy who had little schooling he has become somewhat cultured, reading voraciously and learning two or three languages besides English.

A PRISONER'S REMARKABLE PLEA

Pomeroy's remarkable communication, with his own spelling, punctuation, and paragraphing, is as follows:

Massachusetts State Prison.

Dear Sir:

Having received the paper to write, I will put down a few particulars of my case, in the hope that, as I have been closely confined almost thirty-six years, since I was fourteen years old, I may, at this date, be allowed a few privileges. Reminding you of what Governor Long allowed me, when Captain David M. Earle was Warden (1891). I will recall to your kind attention my record of conduct. This was perfect, and after five years, in 1896, Warden E. J. Russell took away all those privileges, because of the solitary sentence, being sustained by Governor Robinson and his Council (November, 1886.) This fact is known by all the old officers, and is on the register. Governer Long allowed me to go to chapel, to attend concerts, to go in the yard holidays, with the whole prison. I did well, and when Warden Ersher took charge in 1893, on St. Patrick's Day he established the Saturday afternoon hour in the yard and I was given that too.

In fact, the five years from 1891 to 1895 were hopeful, pleasant years, and there was no idea of making my life harder than could be helped. In 1884 Governor Robinson gave me the privilege of having my visits in the guar droom, as all do.

Russel moved me back to the Arch, and visits were there, afterward.

I assure you that none of those privileges was abused, or lost by misconduct.

An incentive to do well, encouragement in doing well, had in these years a good result.

To-day I can have those privileges, it will be, as with all, an incentive which I do not now have.

Now this prisoner's life is always the same, year in, year out. I have no prospect of privileges by good conduct, which has been good, many years, as I told you.

Besides this, I am to-day worse off as to light, air, human society and opportunity to see officials, than I was in 1875-1895.

The sentence, as to-day carried out, is harsher, more oppressive than in those nineteen years, but it is the same sentence as in 1876.

REQUESTS CLEAR GLASS

My windows are opaque glass, cutting off much light.

I ask clear glass; as I always did have.

No sunshine reaches into my cell. I always had a sunny room, the windows being 33 in. by 23 in.

My room to-day has the ventilation closed up, contrary to law, from no fault of mine.

There was no closed blank door on my cell to 1895, because my sentence was hardship enough, and there was no idea of denying me a chance to see a soul.

Since 1895 that closed door has been illegally shut on me, and Governor Douglas ordered it open for a little while in the daytime, so that I might have a little air.

It is shut eighteen hours a day, and ought to be taken off, being contrar yto my sentence.

Very seldom can I see any State House officials.

Very seldom can I obtain from them an answer to any letter that I write.

Except once or twice a year they do not come near me.

Exercise, as ordered by Governor Amez, is refused to me. (1899.)

I respectfully suggest, that this prisoner may have some encouragement in doing well. He is no worse than his neighbors. Kindness is never lost on any one, and this prisoner has all his life shown himself responsive to kind treatment. Although I have made some errors here, I have never once been vilent or dangerous.

No officer has ever accused me of it. The register shows the fact as I say, yet the newspapers have been full of yarns about me, as, for instance, that I tried to kill the warden, and so was shut up in a cell. (New York World, 1889.)

I should be allowed to write sixteen letters a year, the rule. I can write but twelve.

Upon reflection, I think I have clearly and fully stated the case as I view it.

REFERENCE TO GOVERNOR GASTON

To give me privileges, the Governor will have to be consulted, as the sentence is still solitary, and the commissioners and Warden have no authority to leave me beyond my cell.

Whether my case can have your sympathy I do not know. If an effort to uplift this life would bring you pleasure, as it brought pleasure to Governor Gaston in 1877. His message to me (1888) was: "I am not sorry I gave, glad I saved that boy's life. He would not sign my death warrant." (See council records July, 1877.)

You know all about my case. Public feeling against me is respectable, for the deeply rooted and persistent newspaper misrepresentation all these years, and that public feeling was due to newspaper exaggeration and notoriety in 1874.

Of course it cannot be denied that the crime was dreadful and that public justice required satisfaction, but the truth is, no effort has been made from that day to this to better this prisoner's condition.

I have no friends, no influence, I cannot get a hearing from the Governor. I have been left to my own devices in this cell all these years.

PIE A POLITICAL ISSUE

Special to The Examiner.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., NOV. 4.—A real, old-fashioned Indian pumpkin pie and a tamale to eat the same with is pretty Cherokee Indian girl have made many enemies for Charles E. Creager, democratic Congressman from the Third Oklahoma district, and probably will cost him his seat.

A short while ago, while campaigning in the Cherokee National Creager attended a pie social at Needmore, an interior village. The girls of the neighborhood had made good pumpkin pies and put them in pretty boxes to be raffled off. Custom decreed that the winner of a pie should hunt up the maker and eat it with her.

Representative Creager drew a pie and, ignorant of local customs, went outside and dropped in the weeds. Auctioneer Thomas Burk considered this an insult to the girl who baked the pie and publicly denounced Creager.

Burk carried the matter in emphatic terms to County Chairman Collins, who took a couple of shots at Burk. Since that incident occurred the story has gained weight and become a political weapon which is being used with telling force against Creager.

SEATTLE HEALTHIEST CITY

Special to The Examiner.

SEATTLE, NOV. 4.—Basing its Seattle is 9.3 to each 1,000 of population of 241,500, Health Commissioner J. E. Crichton's office announces that the death rate of the city of Seattle is 9.3 to each 1,000 of population, and its birth rate 18 in each 1,000, a fact that places Seattle, in all probability, in the first place in cities of the United States for a minimum death rate. In the registration district recognized by the government the death rate average is 15 in every thousand of population.

SPLENDID BILL

Two Good Acts Are Being Shown at the Royal Theatre

Two special acts of universal merit and interest are the chief features of the bill at the Royal Theatre for the balance of the week and should attract crowded houses. The two acts which come direct from the Majestic Theatre, Toronto, consist of Prof. Dodd and his wonderful mind-reading dog, "Bill," who poses, talks, plays cards and does a score of other interesting things, and the Lorraine sisters, a dandy song and dance team.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

There will be a splendid men's meeting on Sunday afternoon in the Y.M.C.A. An orchestra will accompany the singing of the hymns, and there will be some special male singing by members of the George Street Methodist Church choir. Add to the above the fact that Rev. W. C. Riddiford will be the speaker and you have a combination well worth coming to hear. This meeting is open to all the men of the city. There is no collection.

The Sunday morning Bible Study Club will meet as usual in the parlour and it is confidently expected that a number of the old members will be back in their places. This club is self organized and is led in study by the General Secretary. The lesson for Sunday morning will be the story of the man at the Pool of Bethesda, John V. You need not be a member of the Association to join this Club.

The Membership Committee has been called to meet on Saturday evening at eight o'clock, when applications for membership will be passed on to the Board, which will meet on Tuesday next.

The local Association is to have a visit from Dr. John Brown, one of the International Secretaries. He will be here on Nov. 11th, 12th and 13th. He will meet with the officers and with the several committees and talk over the several branches of the association work. The Association is to be congratulated on having such a man to confer with. He will likely address a mass meeting for men on the 13th.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

HALLIDAY WILL BE HERE.

Wm. T. Halliday, whom Peterborough people will remember by his very funny work as Hogan of "Bogan and Bacon" fame in "Painting the Town," will be seen here to-night in support of Miss Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl." He has a leading comedy role as Salvatore, the Secretary of State.

Sousa's famous band will be heard at the Grand Opera House on November 22nd. This will be the musical event of the season.

NEWSBOYS MADE BEGGARS

Special to The Examiner:

PITTSBURG, NOV. 4.—Milton D. Hays, formerly a railroad president and to-day owner of the Pittsburg Southern Railroad since absorbed by the Baltimore & Ohio, and said to have been worth $1,000,000 at one time, was haled into court on a charge of assisting newsboys to finance the public in the guise of charity. Losing much of his fortune, he became publisher and owner of a publication called the Newsboy.

Pierce C. Williams, secretary of the Pittsburg Chamber of Commerce, and General Secretary Charles Weller of the Associated Charities, appeared against Isadore Goldstein, a newsboy who had been taken selling the Newsboy with a letter written by Hays. Williams and Weller openly accused Hays of making beggars of the newsboys by issuing them letters, with which they went into offices and sold the publication. One of the letters signed by Hays was presented to the Court. It reads:

"This boy is making twenty-one meals a week for a family. Help him by purchasing the Newsboy."

Hays denies the accusation, but was unable to explain to the Court's satisfaction and was ordered to desist from the practice.

TO CURE A HEADACHE

The experience of Mr. O. Barber, Simcoe, Ont., is of interest to all who suffer from headaches. He writes: "For a long time I was troubled with headaches which came on about once a week with such violence that I could not eat or do my work. Headache powders and quick cures did me no good. I then used six boxes of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food and have not been troubled with headache since. That was eight months ago."

SPLENDID WINDOW

A very pretty and effective Thanksgiving window was that of Coleman Bros., confectioners, 476 George St., showing to advantage a dressed turkey and goose, piped with butter icing; also a fine pumpkin, hollowed out, with light inside, and some macaroon fruits and chocolates in a candy bowl made from half a pumpkin. Other adornments of a very pleasing nature made the window very attractive, and not a few halted to scrutinize the neat way in which things were arranged.

BAND CONCERT

A feature of the next concert under the auspices of the 57th Regimental Band will be the grand patriotic fantasia "Songs and Dances of Great Britain and Her Colonies." This is scored for thirty-five instrumentalists and twenty-five vocalists. The band will be assisted by twenty-five of the male section of the Madrigal Club. The latter are asked to meet at Mr. Gliddon's studio to-morrow night.

Miss Fanny Bixley Has Served for Two Years and a Half as a Volunteer Officer in California Town

Special to The Examiner.

LOS ANGELES, NOV. 4.—Fashions and bridge have no attraction for Miss Fanny Bixley, the Long Beach young woman who for two and a half years has efficiently and faithfully served as a volunteer special police officer on her town. As the daughter of a rich man her father, owner of the Virginia Hotel and a large land owner, Miss Bixby might live a life of idle pleasure if she wished. But she prefers to give herself to human service instead. Helping wayward boys and girls out of trouble is her chosen occupation. Most of the juvenile offenders of the beach city sooner or later find their way to the plain little office in a down town building that Miss Bixby makes he headquarters. Many a tale of sordid pathos has been sobbed out there, and there many a little sinner has met for the first time a friend who understood and did not judge.

Along the "pike" Miss Bixby is a familiar but unconspicuous figure. She is tall and athletic and her features are really beautiful, but she dresses so simply, hardly varying from the white shirtwaist and dark skirt and plainly trimmed hat the year round, that she attracts very little notice. Usually she is accompanied by a boy or girl one of her charges, whose troubles she is trying to straighten out. It may be a boy of the street, a "newsie" or a bootblack; they are all her friends, and she is their chief consoler and adviser.

HAUNTED MIRROR BLAMED FOR DEATH OF NINE MEN

Special to The Examiner.

LIBBY, MONT., NOV. 4.—The town of Glasgow, in Valley county, Montana, has a "haunted" mirror.

According to the stories, the hoodooed glass has at various times been in the possession of nine men, all of whom have met violent deaths.

The chain of title to the property begins, according to the stories in a man named Dunn, who was a noted character in Valley county and who died with his boots on a number of years ago in consequence of a disagreement with a man who was tried in Texas.

From Dunn the mirror went into the possession of "Long Henry" Thompson of Valley county, who soon had no use for it as he was put into a grave with leaden weights to keep him there.

Ten or other men, who met deaths by violence, the current story traces ownership of the wicked glass at various times, and the chain finally leads up to William A. Humphrey, who owned the mirror until about five years ago, when he was shot and killed by J. R. Stephens, upon whom Humphreys had opened fire.

After Humphrey's death the stories about the mirror became current, and many to whom it was offered refused to purchase it, freely admitting that they were afraid to have it in their possession.

Robert L. Conatser, town marshal of Glasgow, purchased the mirror, and a week later, while hunting Conatser was drowned.

The custodian of Conatser's effects tried to sell the mirror, but could not find a purchaser.

The person who now has charge of the mirror has been urged to destroy it, but he declines to do so, and will not even touch it, declaring that it may remain forever where it now is rather than that he should place his hands upon it.

Don't miss the lecture by Dr. Herbert Symonds of Montreal, on "The Life of Anthony Trollope," in All Saints' Parish Hall, on Monday evening, Nov. 7th. Tickets 25c, can be had at R. L. Payne's drug store.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body, how's kidneys and skin ducts get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

GAS, INDIGESTION AND HEARTBURN GO

Makes Your Out-of-order Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

The question of how long you are going to continue a sufferer from indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapepsin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs, but a reenforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak stomachs should take a little Diapepsin occasionally, and there will be no more indigestion, no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, or heartburn, Sour risings, Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach, and, besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapepsin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel like life is worth living.

STILL MORE ELECTRIC POWER FOR THE LAKE FRONT TOWN

The rock excavation at the new power house at Dam No 2 on the Rice Lake, Ontario, is completed and the forms for the four wheel pits are in place. A force of men are now busily engaged putting in concrete around the forms.

We had the pleasure of seeing the blue prints of the power house superstructure, which will be a magnificent building, says the Trenton Courier. It will be of structural steel framework with brick walls. The interior of the building will be equipped with all the modern appliances used in an up-to-date power house. The wheels and generators are being made in Sweden. Directly opposite the power house on the west side of the road will be erected a large switching station where all power house feeders will centre.

Transmission lines now under construction will branch out from the switching station to the different sections. A camp of 60 men is busily engaged on the line construction. They are now working between Trenton and Belleville and are getting on well towards completion.

The power houses at dams 1 and 2 will be controlled by the Sidney Electric Power Co., Limited, while the Trenton Electric and Water Co., Limited, will be the distributers of power and light at Belleville and Trenton.

FORMER PETERBOROUGH MAN WINS IN A BIG LAW SUIT

A legal battle which has been going on for some years in British Columbia, for the possession of Deadman's Island, has reached another stage in its history. This suit is of interest to Peterborough people, for the reason that one of the principals in the suit is Mr. Theodore Ludgate, a former well known resident of this city. For a number of years past the city of Vancouver has been contesting Mr. Ludgate's title to the ownership of the island, which lies about opposite the city. It looks now as if the matter will finally be disposed of by the Privy Council. A recent despatch from Vancouver says:

The Court of Appeal has handed down a decision in favor of Theodore Ludgate in the case of the Vancouver Lumber Company against the city. Chief Justice McDonald finds there is no authority to support its contention that Deadman's Island at low tide is a part of Stanley Park peninsula. The appeal is allowed with costs. It is possible the case will be carried to the Privy Council.

BOBCAYGEON RATEPAYERS ALSO HAVE A SCHOOL QUESTION

It would appear as though Essex County is not the only section of the Province of Ontario that has a school question to settle. Things do not appear to be going just right up in Bobcaygeon, if we are to judge from the information supplied by the Bobcaygeon Independent. It is the people of the village who appear to be doing the "kicking," and they evidently speak their mind when they get the chance. One of these occasions when the ratepayers got a chance to speak their minds was at a meeting that was recently called in order that the grievances of the people might be publicly expressed. The Independent, in reporting the proceedings, says:

Mrs. Barber spoke nicely and to the point, stating that her child was not taught to write with pen, and for the last three years she had learned very little. The writing that is done was only scribbling. She found that no home work was given, and the child had really nothing to learn.

Mr. Comber asked for some statistics regarding the number of those who are in the Continuation Class, and the percentage of those who passed the entrance not taking in consideration the non-resident pupils. Mr. Hickson said there were fourteen, and about nine of these belong to the village. None passed at the last examination. The percentage of those who should be able to pass should be 75 per cent. A general discussion followed, which centred around Mr. Hickson and Mr. Simpson. Mrs. Henderson asked who was supposed to do the grading of the classes, as it was not done here. Mrs. Gallagher said her Greta was not attending school, nor was she going to attend, as she was not being taught anything.

Mr. Simpson replied that as for Greta if she could not face difficulties or get up the work, it was better for her and others to stay at home. Mr. Simpson also replied to Mr. Barber's remarks stating that he must remember that there were many plucked throughout the province at the recent examinations, and that Bobcaygeon was not alone. He was sorry that so many went down to disaster, but it was expected that with the present reorganization of the school, and with more equipment, better results would follow.

Mr. Pearson took a hand in and suggested that these discussions should take place at the annual nominations. He also said that we should take a vote of the ratepayers as to whether this Continuation class should be continued or not. He believed 95 per cent. of the children never saw this room, and that more attention should be given the lower rooms.

Mr. Moyle mentioned that the parents could not get acquainted with what the children were doing at the school, without some report from the teacher. On the strength of this remark made at the Board meeting last week, it was approved of and monthly reports are to be issued.

The meeting will no doubt have its effect, and it is to be hoped that some good will result.

Peterborough's Power Question As Seen By Commission

The first and second annual reports of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of the Province of Ontario, ending October 31st, 1909 but which have only recently been issued, contain some highly interesting reading as well as some very valuable information. The entire work of the commission is reviewed, a great deal of the report being taken up, of course, with an account of the Commissioner's work in the Niagara district. The report also deals with the power problem in this district, details of which were given to the City Council of Peterborough some time ago. In order that the public may learn of the exact nature of the Commissioner's findings, in so far as Peterborough is concerned, the Examiner publishes below the report of the experts, which is as follows:

In accordance with a resolution passed by the Council of the city of Peterboro, presented herewith, is a report concerning the question of an additional supply of power for the city of Peterborough from Otonabee River.

After careful investigation, Burleigh Falls is recommended as the most feasible development for the needs of Peterborough. All available sites were considered, but Burleigh Falls is without doubt best suited for the needs of this city.

The question resolves itself into the consideration of two power sites, viz., Burleigh Falls, 22 miles from Peterborough, and Auburn Mills, on the outskirts of the town. The other locations examined were not sufficiently important to warrant discussion.

Water Supply

Taking into account the effect of the locks and regulating dams of the Trent Valley Canal System, it would be very safe to assume the flow at Burleigh Falls as equivalent to 95 horse-power per foot of head under minimum conditions. At Auburn the minimum flow would be so increased to make 100 horse-power per foot of head a safe estimate. The location at Auburn would also have the advantage of the storage facilities at Jack's Lake, which is said to have an area equal to that of Stony Lake, and could be raised ten feet above its natural level at comparatively small expense. At the present speaking, Burleigh Falls has a great advantage over the Auburn site in that the storage facilities of Lovesick Lake afford greater scope for load factor accommodation than will ever be possible at Auburn, but it is important to note that in the event of through navigation on the Trent Valley Canal being established, the power interests would be limited to the natural flow of the river as controlled and influenced by the operation of the canal. Consequently, although sufficient water could be drawn off Lovesick Lake to satisfy daily peak load demands without material change in its normal level, the same thing could be done at Auburn with the aid of the waterworks dam. Under the above conditions, both locations would be on a par as regards regulation, while the Auburn site would have the advantage of a larger drainage area, including the storage possibilities of Jack's Lake.

Available Head

The present head at the Auburn dam is about 13 feet. By increasing the tail-water conditions, this could probably be increased to about 16 feet. The crest of the dam could be raised at least three feet without excessive land damages, as the length of the dam would allow of sufficient sluice and spill-way discharge area to take care of flood water. The fact that it would be necessary to keep the head-water level constant would result in a reduction of head during periods of high water. During the spring floods this would be a serious disadvantage, to obviate which it would be necessary to install reserve turbine capacity in the power house.

It is to be noted that of the 19 feet obtainable as described above, 3 feet will be gained at the expense of the waterworks dam, which is half a mile up stream.

At Burleigh the normal head will be about 22 feet, with a possibility of its being increased to 26 feet. This is due to the fact that in the event of through navigation for vessels of 9 feet draught being established on the Trent Valley Canal, the lock sills at Burleigh will be lowered, and at the same time the water level in Lovesick Lake will be raised about 4 feet to the level of Deer Bay, thus drowning out Lovesick Lock. Owing to the large amount of work to be done on the canal between Trenton and Peterborough, nothing will be done at Burleigh for at least four years, so that at present 22 feet only can be counted upon. The head at this location will be comparatively constant owing to the canal regulation, having in this an advantage over the Auburn site.

Topographical Conditions

The topographical conditions at Auburn are most unfavorable, mainly *on account of the width of the chan*nel and the low shores. Owing to these conditions, the construction costs and land damages which would be entailed by the creation of a head equal to that at Burleigh would be unreasonably large in view of the capacity of the plant. Furthermore, any increase in the height of the Auburn dam would result in either

THE PRACTICE of OPTOMETRY

The Science of how to furnish right glasses when needed. Eye Examination to determine the necessity for glasses.

The furnishing of glasses needed has in the past decade become almost an absolute and exact science, which is based upon purely mathematical and optical principals. This is now so firmly established that laws regulating the practice of Optometry are written in the statute books of 21 of the States of America, two of the Provinces of Canada, and in Great Britain. It is a foregone conclusion that similar legislation will be enacted in other States and Provinces. We believe that it is not possible to examine too thoroughly, to make the mathematical calculation too carefully for the eyes, when so much comfort, happiness, and ability to earn a livelihood, is so dependent upon such.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim)

The eyes of every one were bent upon the Duke. He nodded his head slowly.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, "certainly came to me and made the statement which he has just repeated. I considered the matter, and I came to the conclusion that he was mistaken. I was sure of it then. I am equally sure of it now."

"Tell us, Mr. Ducaine," Lord Chelsford said, "what your reasons were for making such a statement."

I took a piece of red tape and newspaper from the table before which I stood. I folded up the newspaper and tied the tape around it.

"When I put those documents away," I said, "I tied them up with a knot like this, of my own invention which I have never seen used by anybody else. In the morning I found that my knot had been untied, and the tape tied around the papers had been rested in an ordinary bow."

"With you permit me for a moment," the Duke interposed. "The safe, I believe, Mr. Ducaine, was secured with a code lock, the word of which was known to—whom?"

"Yourself, sir, Colonel Ray, and myself."

The Duke nodded.

"If I remember rightly," he said, "the code word was never mentioned, but was written on a piece of paper, glanced at by each of us in turn, and immediately destroyed."

"That is quite true, sir."

"Now, do you believe, Mr. Ducaine," the Duke continued, "that it was possible for any one else except us three to have attained to the knowledge of that word?"

"I do not, sir," I admitted.

"Do you believe that it was possible for any one to have opened the safe without the knowledge of that word?"

"Without breaking it open, no, sir."

"There were no signs of the lock having been tampered with when you went to it in the morning?"

"None, sir."

"It was set at the correct word, the word known only to Colonel Ray, myself, and yourself?"

"Yes, sir."

The Duke leaned back in his chair and addressed Lord Chelsford.

"For the reasons which you have heard from Mr. Ducaine himself," he said drily, "I came to the conclusion that he was mistaken in his suggestion. I think that you will probably be inclined to agree with me."

These men had learnt well the art of masking their feelings. From Lord Chelsford's polite bow I could gather nothing.

"I am forced to admit," he said, "that no other conclusion seems possible. Now, Mr. Ducaine, with regard to the execution of your work. It is carried out altogether, I believe at the 'Brand'?"

"Entirely, sir."

"Your only servant is the man Gooden, for whom the Duke and I myself are prepared to vouch. You are also watched by detectives residing in the village, as I dare say you know. I also understand that you have no private correspondence, and receive practically no visitors. Now tell me the only persons who, to your knowledge, have entered the 'Brand' since you have been engaged in this work."

I answered him at once.

"Colonel Ray, Lady Angela Harbutt, Lord Benavon, the Prince of Malors, and a young lady called Blanche Moyat, the daughter of a farmer in Blaster at whose house I used sometimes to visit."

Lord Chelsford referred to some notes in his hand. Then he leaned back in his chair and looked at me steadfastly.

"Is there any one," he asked, "whom you suspect to have visited you for the purpose, either direct, or indirect, of gaining information as to your work?"

"Yes, sir," I answered promptly.

A little exclamation escaped from the Commander-in-Chief. Lord Chelsford never removed his eyes from my face, the Duke had still the appearance of a tolerant but slightly bored listener.

"Who?" Lord Chelsford asked.

"The Prince of Malors," I answered.

There was a moment's silence. Lord Chelsford turned again to his notes. Then he looked up at me.

"On reasons," he asked.

I told them the story carefully and circumstantially. When I had finished Colonel Ray left his seat and whispered something in Lord Chelsford's ear. The Duke interposed.

"I wish," he said, "to add a brief remark to the story which you have just heard. I have known Malors since he was a boy, my father knew his father, and, as you may know, our families have been frequently connected in marriage. I do not wish to impugn the good faith of this young man, but the Prince of Malors was my guest, and the accusation against him is one which I cannot believe."

"The story as I have told it, sir, is absolutely true," I said to Lord Chelsford. "There was no room for any mistake or misapprehension on my part. I am afraid that I haven't been a great success as your secretary. Colonel Ray gave me to understand, of course, that your object in engaging an utterly unknown person was to try and stop this leakage of information. It is still going on and I cannot stop it. I am quite prepared to give up my post at any moment."

Lord Chelsford nodded towards the door.

"Will you be so good as to step into the next room for a few minutes, Mr. Ducaine?" he said. "We will discuss this matter together."

I departed at once, and found my way into a bare waiting-room, hung with a few maps, and with uncarpeted floor. The minutes dragged along slowly. I hated the thought of dismissal. I rebelled against it almost fiercely. I had done my duty. I had told the truth, there was nothing against me save this obstinate and quixotic loyalty of the Duke to an old family friend. Yet I scarcely dared hope that there was a chance for me.

At last I heard the door open, and the sound of friendly adieux in the passage. Lord Chelsford came in to me alone. He took up a position with his back to the fire and looked at me thoughtfully.

"Well, Mr. Ducaine," he said, "we have discussed this matter thoroughly and we are all practically agreed that there is no reason why we should ask you to give up your position."

I was almost overcome. It was a wonderful relief to me.

"But surely the Duke—" I faltered.

"The Duke is very loyal to his friends, Mr. Ducaine," he said, "but he is also a man with a nice sense of justice. You and he regard two incidents from entirely different points of view, but he does not for a moment suggest that your account of them is not an honest one. He looks upon you as a little nervous and overstrung by your responsibilities and disposed to be imaginative. He will not hear anything against the Prince of Malors."

"My story is as true as God's Word," I declared.

"I am inclined to believe in it myself, Mr. Ducaine," said Lord Chelsford. "There are indications of a strong revival of Royalist sentiment amongst the French people, and it is very possible that the Prince of Malors may wish to ingratiate himself by any means with the French army. This sort of thing scarcely sounds like practical politics, but one has to bear in mind the peculiar temperament of the man himself, and the nation. I personally believe that the Prince of Malors would consider himself justified in abusing the hospitality of his dearest friend in the cause of patriotism. At any rate, this is my view, and I am acting upon it. All danger from that source will now be at an end, for in an hour's time the Prince will be under the surveillance of detectives for the remainder of his stay in England."

I breathed a sigh of relief.

"I am to go back to Blaster, then?" I asked.

"To-night, if possible," Lord Chelsford answered. "Go on living as you have been living. And listen! If you should have further cause to suspect the Prince of Malors or anybody else, communicate with me or with Ray. The Duke is, of course, a man of ability and an honourable man, but he is prejudiced in favour of his friends. Some of us others have had to learn our lessons of life, and men, in a sharper school. You understand me, Mr. Ducaine, I am sure."

"I perfectly understand, sir," I answered.

"There is nothing more which you wish to ask me?"

"There is a suggestion I should like to make, sir, with regard to the disposal of my finished work," I told him.

"Go on, Mr. Ducaine. I shall be glad to listen to it."

"I—"

There was a knock at the door. Lord Chelsford held up his finger.

"Send it to me in writing," he said in a low tone. "To-morrow.—Come in!"

Ray entered.

CHAPTER XIX.

MRS SMITH-LESSING.

Ray and I left the building together. As we turned into Pall Mall he glanced at his watch.

"You have missed the six o'clock train," he remarked. "I suppose you know that there is nothing now till the nine-twenty. Will you come to the club with me, and have some dinner?"

It was less an invitation than a command. I felt a momentary impulse of rebellion, but the innate masterfulness of the man triumphed easily. I found myself walking, a little against my will, down Pall Mall by his side. A man of some note, he was saluted every minute by passers-by, whom, however, he seemed seldom to notice. In his town clothes, his great height, his bronzed face, and black beard made him a sufficiently striking personality. I myself, though I was little short of six feet, seemed almost insignificant by his side. Until we reached the club he maintained an unbroken silence. He even ignored some passing comment of mine, but when once inside the building he seemed to remember that he was my host, and his manner became one of stiff kindness. He ordered an excellent dinner and chose the wine with care. Then he leaned a little forward across the table, and electrified me by his first remark.

"Ducaine," he said, "what relatives have you with whom you are in any sort of communication?"

"None at all," I answered.

"Sir Mortimer Treadby was your mother's brother," he remarked. "He is still alive."

"I believe so," I admitted. "I have never approached him, nor has he ever taken any notice of me."

"You did not write to him, for instance, when Heathcote absconded, and you had to leave college?"

"Certainly not," I answered. "I did not choose to turn beggar."

"How much," he asked, "do you know of your family history?"

"I know," I told him, "that my father was cashiered from the army for misconduct and committed suicide. I know, too, that my mother's people treated her shamefully, and that she died alone in Paris and almost in poverty. It was scarcely likely, therefore, that I was going to apply to them for help."

Ray nodded.

"I thought so," he remarked, grimly. "I shall have to talk to you for a few minutes about your father."

I said nothing. My surprise indeed, had bereft me of words. He sipped his wine slowly, and continued.

"Fate has dealt a little hardly with you," he said. "I am almost a stranger to you, and there are even reasons why you and I could never be friends. Yet it apparently falls to my lot to supplement the little you know of a very unpleasant portion of your family history. That rascal of a lawyer who absconded with your money should have told you on your twenty-first birthday."

"A pleasant heritage!" I remarked bitterly; "yet I always wanted to know the whole truth."

"Here goes, then," he said, filling my glass with wine. "Your father was second in command at Gibraltar. He sold a plan of the gallery forts to the French Government, and was dismissed from the army."

I started as though I had been stung. Ray continued, his stern, matter-of-fact tone unshaken.

"He did not commit suicide as you were told. He lived, in Paris, a life of continual and painful degregation. Your mother died of a broken heart. There was another woman, of course, whose influence over your father was unbounded, and at whose instigation he committed this disgraceful act. This woman is now at Brasier."

My brain was in a whirl. I was quite incapable of speech.

"Her real name," he continued, coolly, "God only knows. For the moment she calls herself Mrs. Smith-Lessing. She is a Franco-American, a political adventuress of the worst type, living by her wits. She is ugly enough to be Satan's mistress, and she's forty-five if she's a day, yet she has but to hold up her finger, and men tumble the gifts of their life into her lap, gold and honour, conscience and duty. At present I think it highly probable that you are her next selected victim."

'GRACE' LIFELIKE; BRITISH OBJECT

New Maugham Play Turns Searchlight of Sarcasm on Current Society.

PRESS AGENT EXPOSED

Tiff in Theatre Over Women's Big Hats Was Prearranged, Court Proceedings Show.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

"GRACE," the name of the latest play from the prolific pen of Mr. W. Somerset Maugham, is interesting from start to finish. The story is a likely one, the characters are natural and there is also an abundance of wit and considerable philosophy in the lines. Moreover, it was splendidly acted down to the very smallest part. Also it had the prestige of being presented by Mr. Charles Frohman at his Duke of York's Theatre.

All this would indicate that the play will be a great success, but it probably will not be. It's a little too lifelike and rubs an English audience the wrong way. They are not fond here of having the searchlight of sarcasm and caricature turned on their characteristic weaknesses.

ARTISTS FIND FAULT.

The critics as a rule find fault with the play on the ground that the characters are not real and are overdrawn. That's just where they fool themselves. The characters are too real and the incidents too common to be complimentary. In fully half the country houses you go to in England you will find just such people as Mr. Maugham has put in his play. The narrow minded and blue blooded young clergyman, the conceited and browbeating old dowager, the unmoral and shallow lover and the cynical and bored to death lady of class all exist among the country gentry and are not people of fiction. The country house go-as-you-please breakfast and the way they wallop it up are absolutely typical.

The hub of the play is whether or not the squire's wife shall confess to her adoring husband that she has had a lover. She has meddled her ways and decides to keep him in blissful ignorance, letting her guilty secret be her punishment. Well, wouldn't most women?

MISS VANBRUGH'S CHARM.

Miss Irene Vanbrugh had the leading part and acted it with delightful charm and finish. When it came to the agony passages she put on the loud pedal with fine effect. Mr. Edmund Gwenn's acting seems to improve with each new part. In this play his character work as an old gamekeeper was a gem. Lady Tree played the duchess with a touch of humor that kept the audience constantly amused.

The critics also complain that as the subject of the play is serious it is inartistic to liven it up with humorous scenes. What nonsense! or as they say here—"What rot!"

It seems that the London press agent has become inoculated with American methods, but unlike his American confrere he gives his game away. That was a fatal mistake, for Londoners will never forgive him for fooling them and it will be a very lucky press agent indeed who can get the public to believe in the genuineness of any theatrical story his fertile brain may evolve.

The shocking exposé of managerial duplicity all came out in the Westminster County Court the other day when Mr. T. H. Dilks, a press agent, sued Mr. Frank Curzon, manager of the Prince of Wales Theatre, for £30. It was then revealed that all London was neatly and completely hoodwinked last season when "The Mikado Princess" was being played at Mr. Curzon's theatre.

TIFF IN THEATRE.

At one of the matinees two women came in wearing enormous hats. A man sitting behind them made some very pointed and personal remarks concerning the aforesaid hats. One of the women turned around and talked back. Her conversation was also very snappy and personal, conveying the suggestion that the complainer should mind his own business and clearly intimating that she would not take her hat off. More talk of an ungracious nature and the curtain went down.

The man went out and complained, and an usher asked the woman to step out to the lobby and see the manager. They did so, and Mr. Curzon very suavely asked them to take off their hats so the people behind could see. They refused on the ground that they had been insultingly spoken to and demanded permission to go them. Mr. Curzon barred the way and returned the ticket money back. They decided it threatened legal proceedings and flounced out.

Since which, within a few days Mr. Curzon was summoned to the Bow Street Police Court for assault. The hats were in evidence, and it transpired that one of the women was Miss Blanch Bardsley, who is child's real mother's servant. Mr. Curzon was discharged, the newspapers printed extracts, and in a day or so the incident was forgotten.

WAS PRESS AGENT GAME.

Now it seems that it was all a fake. Mr. Curzon admitted that the whole thing was got up and premeditated by Mr. Dilks with his consent. He says he didn't agree to pay anything for it, however. Mr. Dilks says he was to get £30, and his wife, who was also employed, £20. Mrs. Bardsley denied that Mr. Dilks spoke to her about the matter at all. Judge Bacon entered into the spirit of the thing and decided in favor of Mr. Curzon, as it appears that Mr. Dilks had endeavored to use the unfortunate lady as a medium to advertise the theatre. So that it looks as if the press agent's game was to get a free seat for himself, his wife and his child, and to get a free advertisement for the theatre, simply for the amount of his salary.

The judge rendered his decision with the sanctimonious remark that he didn't propose to have the courts used as a medium to advertise the theatre. So that it looks as if the press agent's game was to get a free seat for himself, his wife and his child, and to get a free advertisement for the theatre, simply for the amount of his salary.

Exiled King Is Living Now Amid Historic Souvenirs

HISTORIC ENTRANCE GATES.—WOOD NORTON
(COPYRIGHT BY TOPICAL PRESS)

Wood Norton, Duke of Orleans' Residence in England, Has Gates That Once Stood Before Royal Palace at Versailles.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

King Manuel, who is spending the early days of his exile in England at Wood Norton, the country house of the Duke of Orleans, will still be known in this country as King Manuel and not by any of his minor titles. Among the most interesting sights at Wood Norton are the wonderful gilded gates that once stood before the palace at Versailles. The fleur-de-lis is carved in high relief upon the massive stone side pillars, and the same emblem dominates the elaborate design worked out in iron by the old French craftsmen.

The Versailles gates, opened once more to welcome royalty, are rarely used, for it is by a much more modest gate of white painted wood that admittance is ordinarily gained to the grounds and house.

The house is far from being a palace. At the same time it is impossible to ignore the royal pretensions of the establishment. The very electric bell pushes on the front door exhibit the fleur-de-lis in bas-relief, and the arms of the royal house of France are emblazoned again and again upon the house front.

King Manuel and Queen Amélie will, of course, only be temporarily housed at Wood Norton. They will probably set up their own establishment at Claycombe, an old house on the Duke of Orleans' estate, perched on a hill among thick game woods. The present tenant has signified her willingness to vacate the house if King Manuel and his mother wish it. Queen Amélie knows the place well, for she lived there for a short time before her marriage. Though old and not very large it is charmingly situated.

COHEN HID BEHIND NAME 'FORTESCUE'

Money Lender Loses Suit and Is Flayed by Court for Using Historic Appellation.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

A VIGOROUS denunciation of the practice of money lenders of the "loan shark" variety in dropping their own names and registering their businesses under old fashioned English appellatives has been delivered from the Bench by Mr. Justice Darling. He has urged that Parliament so alter the law as to make such methods impossible.

The Judge's protest was evoked in the course of a suit which a firm of moneylenders, calling themselves "I. Fortescue, Limited," instituted against Lieutenant Colonel W. Tenison, a retired army officer, who is said to own large property in Ireland. The defendant had paid back the principal of the loans, together with interest at the rate of twenty-five per cent., but the plaintiff concern demanded interest at the rate of 100 per cent.

The plaintiff who appeared for the loan agency gave the name of I. Cohen and stated that he was managing director of I. Fortescue, Limited. In reply to the Judge, however, he admitted that he was practically the company, and that there was nobody of the name of Fortescue actually connected with the loan concern. He had adopted the old English name solely as a "trading name."

"Fortescue is not an English 'trading name,'" asserted Justice Darling, after he had given judgment for the defendant, holding that twenty-five per cent was ample interest for any borrower to pay. "It is the name of a well known English family, and it is no more a 'trading name' than is the name of Plantagenet. I desire to refer to the moral side of this case. The Legislature has said that money lenders must register and deal with people under their registered names. Now, I cannot think that the Legislature really meant that their efforts should result in persons of the name of Cohen taking the names of well known families such as Fortescue.

"One knows that this is not a solitary exception. It is a common practice, not only here but in other countries, for money lenders to conceal their real names, which would not induce people to deal with them, by taking the names of historic English families or families of great position, and I think the sooner the Legislature has time to say that a money lender must register himself by his real name the better. It should be made perfectly plain that the statute will not allow a person to take a name which inspires confidence and then put the word 'limited' behind it.

"The money lender, I say, does not take the name because it is a 'trade name.' He takes it because he knows that unfortunate people come to the conclusion that they are not dealing with the person they are really dealing with."

Police Court Parties New Fad of London Society

MRS. WINSTON CHURCHILL
FROM THE PASTIME

Mrs. Winston Churchill's Action in Interesting Herself in Petty Criminals May Be Beginning of Fashionable Pastime.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

WILL police court parties succeed slumming as a fashionable pastime? The question arises through Mrs. Winston Churchill, the accomplished and energetic wife of the Home Secretary, interesting herself in the workings of the criminal law with as great keenness as her husband, and prison reformers are looking to her as an ally in the amelioration of the lot of those who come within its pale.

Mr. and Mrs. Winston Churchill were very much interested in Mr. Galsworthy's play "Justice," and it is an open secret that this powerful drama was a potent factor in helping forward those reforms which the Home Secretary foreshadowed in the House of Commons, while his wife took to visiting police courts to watch the cases of "drunks," petty thieves and other features of the everyday police court. She is frequently seen at Bow Street her features always evidencing the pity that the poor creatures arouse in her as they stand disconsolate in the dock. The amelioration of the lot of these people is what Mrs. Churchill has now at heart.

During the early weeks of November a good many of the more prominent members of Anglo-American society will be settling down in town. Mrs. James Henry Smith is already back in Grosvenor square; Mrs. Anthony Drexel will, for part of the winter at least, be in residence in her house close by, and so will Mrs. Henry Coventry, whose new home facing Brook street is all but finished. As in several other cases, the redecoration of this house has been delayed by difficulties with the French artists and workmen.

Another American hostess who will soon be in London is Mrs. Henry Payne Whitney. She is to go to Paris first, but will come to London, where she has, or is taking, a house for her two months' stay.

A very popular hostess on the north side of the park, Lady Newborough, is giving up her house in Portland square, which she has occupied for several years, and where she has entertained, if not so often, at any rate as successfully as any Anglo-American in town. The American Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid have been among her guests there, and her pretty drawing room, furnished in excellent taste with old French furniture and always filled with masses of flowers, has been a pleasant rendezvous of interesting people.

Lord and Lady Granard have been paying visits ever since their return from America. They are now at Floors Castle, where the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe are entertaining a succession of parties. With the opening of Parliament Lord and Lady Granard will take up residence at Forbes House, Halkin street, and square; Mrs. Anthony Drexel will, for Lady Granard may possibly entertain for part of the winter at least, be in residence her husband's party during November.

SEES DECLINE IN NAVY OF BRITAIN

Mr. Balfour Makes Plea to Government to Retain Supremacy at Sea.

IS RAP AT OPPONENTS

Sir William White, However, Shows That Germany Is Not Encroaching on England's Power.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Since Lord Charles Beresford wrote his two open letters to the Prime Minister, to which I referred in my last article, many allusions have been made to the matter of the maintenance of British naval supremacy by various high authorities, and now Mr. Balfour has made a stirring appeal to the government and the country to face the situation resolutely and without delay.

Mr. Balfour's speech was directed against the past policy of his political adversaries, and in this respect the leader of the opposition broke new ground. He has not before contended that the danger was other than in the future. But in seeking our relative naval position declined so to prove that never in our history has much as it has done within the last five years he does not seem to be possessed of complete knowledge of all the factors of the case.

It is easy to show that to-day the striking power of the British fleet is infinitely stronger absolutely than what it was in 1905, and that no material change has occurred relatively to foreign countries. This is so not merely by reason of the new vessels which England has built and the speed with which they have been constructed, but because of the changes in the disposition and organization of the fleet and its preparation for war.

Changes in Organization.

Most important among these changes were the institution of the system of nucleus crews and the creation of a home fleet, and the former of these was carried out while Mr. Balfour was still Prime Minister.

In referring to the prospective position of the fleets in 1913 Mr. Balfour was even less illuminating than Lord Charles Beresford. The Admiral showed in his first letter to the Prime Minister that, whereas England had provided for twenty-five vessels of the Dreadnought and Indomitable types, the next strongest Power, which is Germany, has authorised twenty-one such vessels, but he admitted that by the time these twenty one vessels would be ready for service Great Britain would have available, in addition to the twenty-five already provided, those to be built under the navy estimates of next year. Mr. Balfour, on the other hand, ignores next year's programme altogether and concludes that in 1913 the British margin of superiority will be four vessels only.

This can only be possible if Germany increase the rate of her war ship construction in order to complete the sixteen vessels she has building or authorised before the appointed dates.

This view is supported by Sir William White, who for seventeen years was Director of Naval Construction at the Admiralty, in a contribution to the Spectator:

German's Not Hastening.

He says, in refutation of the reports that the German naval authorities intend to shorten the period of construction for large vessels, that "up to date, however, there is no evidence of any such acceleration in the rate of progress having been achieved, and it is worth notice that German naval administrators have disclaimed any intention to take that course.

Speaking broadly, the programme as amended in 1909 is being carried out substantially as proposed so far as numbers of vessels and dates of completion are concerned.

It has been noted that Mr. Balfour, while describing the situation as most lamentable and dangerous, did not indorse the demand of some of his supporters for a two keels to one standard based upon the strength of the next strongest naval Power, while in regard to the method of payment and the expediency of a loan he went no further than Mr. Lloyd George when he said that if we cannot afford to build more vessels out of the revenue of the year we must borrow the money.

It is fairly common knowledge that the naval estimates of next year, should the liberal party remain in power, will be increased by some three or four millions sterling, and among those who ought to know there is a firm conviction that if Mr. Balfour was to succeed Mr. Asquith in office the increase would be no larger.

HER "SAUCER HAT" ANGERS A JUDGE

Court Orders Woman Witness to Lift Headgear so That Her Eyes May Be Seen.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

WHILE the "hobble skirt" has been the target of much criticism, the "saucer hat" is the latest article of feminine apparel to actually come into contact with the law. A woman stenographer appeared as a witness in a case in the Bloomsbury County Court wearing headgear of this type, of more than ordinary size, the brim of which almost concealed her face.

"Tip your hat back, please," commanded Judge Bacon, who occupied the bench, and the young woman raised the brim until her nose was revealed.

"That won't do," protested the Judge. "I cannot see your eyes, and the eyes are the 'windows of the soul' in a case like this."

"Will that do?" asked the witness, as she gave the hat another nudge.

"No," returned the Judge. "It will not. There is a dark shadow across your features and your eyes are hidden."

"I cannot up it back any further," insisted the young woman.

"I think you are a most obstinate young woman," asserted Judge Bacon. "You will have to tip it back further."

"Then I shall take it off," declared the witness.

"No, you will not," ruled the Court. I will not have a woman in court with her head bare."

The young woman made another effort. She pulled out very slowly several long pins, one by one.

"Do not lose your temper," cautioned Judge Bacon. "I hope you will not spoil the shape of the hat, but really headgear of that type ought to be prohibited in court."

At last the hat was tilted sufficiently to reveal the girl's eyes, and she then was permitted to give her testimony.

WOMEN IN COURT ACT AS "ASSESSORS"

English judicial procedure has set a precedent for the relief of American judges who may have to wrestle, Solomon like, with cases involving the question of the acceptability of a dressmaker's products. In the Wellingborough County Court Judge Snagge was presented with certain technical contentions as to feminine fashion which he did not feel competent to decide alone. He found a way out of the difficulty, however, by calling upon all the women in the court room to act as "assessors."

Accompanied by these assistants, thus hastily impressed into the judicial service, the Judge retired to his chambers, where a woman litigant, who had resisted the claim of a dressmaker on the ground that a garment which had been made for her was a misfit, pronounced back and fo h to put on. A majority of the "assessors" decided that the garment was too long, but that it could be altered without injury. Discharging his advisers from further service, Judge Snagge again ascended the bench and promptly ruled that the dressmaker must make the alterations suggested before she could

FIND ROMAN BOAT NEAR THE THAMES

London Workmen Excavating for County Council Palace Unearth Relic 1,600 Years Old.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

A REMARKABLE discovery, and from the antiquarian point of view a most valuable one, has just been made in London, worthy to set beside the famous fragments of Nero's galley from Lake Nemi, in the Hornuman Museum. It is nothing less than the well preserved remains of an old Roman boat which must have sailed the Thames about sixteen hundred years ago.

In digging the foundations of the new palace of the London County Council on the south bank of the river at Westminster Bridge the workmen came upon some timbers about twenty feet below the modern surface and at the bottom of seven feet of solid mud, beneath which was a bed of clean sand. Experts declare the discovery to be a genuine Roman boat, the only carravel built Roman boat that has ever been found in England.

The vessel lies at an angle of the river close to the old water line, looking as if it had been run ashore on a dropping tide when it made its last journey. In it was found a coin of the year 292 of the Emperor Carausius, the great commander who rebelled against Rome and held his own in Britain for several years, and it is considered no great stretch of imagination to suppose that this large formed part, if a humble part, of his perhaps the earliest British fleet. At any rate the vessel shows that they were good boat builders in those days. The planks are three inch oak along the bottom and two inch along the sides, and some of them are fourteen inches wide. Its gunwale strake is three inch oak, with big holes that may have been oar holes.

There were also found in the barge a coin of the year 80, some fragments of leather shoes and scraps of black pottery with the plain network pattern.

CRITICISES PRISONS HERE.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Sir Evelyn Ruggles-Brise, chairman of the Prisons Commission, who has returned to England after his visit of inspection to the United States, where he attended the Prison Reform Congress, is of the opinion that there is no comparison between English prisons and those of the United States, the latter being "miles behind."

"One great fault of the American system," he says "is that the prison authorities have not yet attempted to solve the problem of short term imprisonment."

SEES CANADA'S PROGRESS.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Mr. Harry E. Brittain, barrister, journalist and business man, who is well known to Americans by reason of the active part he takes in the Pilgrims' Club, of which he is honorary secretary, is very keen upon a scheme to take over to British Columbia and Canada a company of about a hundred leading business men to let them see what wonderful openings there are for commercial enterprise—openings which the American is well alive to, and to which the Britisher is apparently blind.

ESCAPE IN FALLS FROM HIGH PLACES

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

ON the ground that falls from great heights, not necessarily fatal, are becoming so frequent in these days of aeroplaning, the Lancet, one of the foremost British medical periodicals, refers in the current issue to a number of remarkable falls which have been recorded. One of the cases cited has to do with a man who recently fell from the top of a Dover cliff four hundred feet high. He was picked up insensible in about five feet of water, but his boots were off, and it is argued that he must have retained sufficient consciousness after striking the water to have pulled them off his feet.

Among classic English falls is mentioned that of a "steeplejack" who in 1800 fell from the top of the Church of St. George in Bolton-le-Moore to the ground, a distance of one hundred and twenty feet. The man's skull, so it is authoritatively affirmed, struck some sheet lead on the earth and left marks of its impact on it, but, though the fall was quite unbroken, the man was only slightly injured and resumed work in a few days. Mons. Manzini, a French observer, is referred to as the authority concerning a remarkable fall which occurred in 1901.

"The victim," says the Lancet, "was a tapissier who had been engaged in putting up the decorations on the occasion of the belated obsequies of Napoleon I. in the lofty dome of the Church of the Invalides in Paris. When busy moving a ladder on the top of a high scaffolding he overbalanced himself, and in obedience to some obscure instinct jumped clear of the ladder and the platform. He fell eighty-two feet, bounding in one place off the roof of a little dome, which caused him to describe a second parabola in the air, and finally, feet first, on the slate roof of a small sacristy. Crashing through the slates, he landed astride a rafter, where, coherent, for he was able to give his name and address when asked for them. He had no recollection of this, and became unconscious when put to bed shortly afterward under the care of the great Paequier. His insensibility lasted a very short time, and at the end of a month he was well.

"Nine years ago Professor Heim, the geologist of Zürich, described the flood of thought that traversed his mind during a typical Alpine fall. He saw beautiful scenes and visions of his past life as he fell and reflected rationally on his death or the chance of escape. He felt no pain on striking the ground, but he heard a sound, which was the impact of his own head on a rock. Another Alpine faller thought about his insurance and his fam-

Tobacco Growing on Extensive Scale for Commercial Purposes in Emerald Isle Is Aim of New Association, Which Expects Large Measure of Success.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

"IT may not be long before the 'Irish perfecto' will be as familiar as the 'clear Havana.' Tobacco growing is being developed with some rapidity in Ireland. It is about twenty years since Colonel Nugent Talbot Everard commenced experimenting in growing tobacco on his estate at Randlestown, County Meath. Others have imitated him, and the result is that now, in addition to his twenty-five acres, there are Lord Barrymore with ten acres, Lord Dunraven with twenty-five acres, Captain Otway Cuffe with seven acres and many others with small plots.

The total area under cultivation in Ireland is 120 acres, comprising seventy-nine acres of pipe tobacco, twenty-eight acres of cigarette and thirteen acres of cigar tobaccos. In Dublin a company employs sixty workmen and turns out pipe tobaccos and cigars and cigarettes, all made from the home grown product.

Tobacco was grown extensively at one time in the "Emerald Isle" for commercial purposes, but the iron heels of successive English rulers effectually stamped out the industry. It was with a view of increasing opportunities for the peasantry that Colonel Everard took up his experiments. After combating many obstacles expert advice was obtained from America, and six years ago the government came to his assistance, the industry now being supervised by a governmental official who combines expert knowledge obtained in America with practical information as to local conditions and indians.

One of the chief drawbacks to the small farmer undertaking the curing of his own tobaccos has been the expensive equipment requisite for a curing barn of the necessary type. But this has been overcome by Colonel Everard, who has devised a cheap portable curing barn. With this new device at hand the Irish Tobacco Growers' Association is now about to approach the government with a definite scheme for extending the industry.

"We can grow an kind of tobacco the dealers ask for," asserts the Colonel.

ART TREASURES INTEREST QUEEN

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

During their short stay in London King George and Queen Mary paid a visit to Hampton Court Palace, making a tour of the state rooms, which are filled with historical and valuable works of art. In all these relics of the past Queen Mary takes a great interest, and Her Majesty evidently intends to make herself thoroughly acquainted with all the royal palaces, as well as with the art treasures which they contain.

Suites of rooms in Hampton Court Palace are usually granted by the sovereign to the widows of those who have deserved well of the State. Among those living there at present are Lord and Lady Wolseley. Here is to be found a wonderful collection of old furniture and curios, for Lady Wolseley has a perfect passion for collecting, in which she has been engaged for many years.

King George intends to retain Frogmore House in his own hands for greater accommodation at Windsor. It will be used, when necessary, to provide room for guests when the castle is full to overflowing. It will also be used by Queen Mary and the royal children when they wish to spend a quiet week in the country without the state of Windsor Castle. Eventually Frogmore will be handed over to Prince Edward when he sets up an establishment of his own.

MISS STORY ENGAGED.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

An engagement which is of interest to Americans is the forthcoming marriage between Captain Courtnay Stewart, R. N., a cousin of the Earl of Galloway, to Miss Gwendolen Story, an American girl who is very popular in Roman society. She has spent the greater part of her life in Rome, where she met her future husband, who is with the British Embassy there.

ASCHE WARMLY WELCOMED

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

After a year and a half of continuous triumph in Australia Mr Oscar Asche and his wife, Miss Lily Brayton, made a triumphant return to the English stage at the New Theatre in "Count Hannibal." This melodrama is adapted from Mr. Stanley Weyman's novel of the same name.

The production was notable for two fine things the powerful and splendid acting of Mr. Asche and the equally powerful and splendid acting of the mob. It was a toss-up who carried off the honors, but I am inclined to think that the mob had the lion's share. It's a sure thing that 'Count Hannibal' would not have been the success it was had the mob been less competent.

It was energetic and well trained and its howling was a work of art. This was fortunate, for the mob had really the star part and was in evidence a large part of the time.

The play had to do with the massacre of the Huguenots and so, of course, everything depended on that murderous mob. It was the opportunity for the 'supers' and they rose to the occasion. Even the man who played the horse hoof beats distinguished himself.

In addition to Mr Asche and the mob there were Miss Brayton, who gave a very dignified and stately performance heavily weighted with woe, and Mr Ben Webster, who made the poltroon lover quite contemptible.

There is no subtlety to the play, and the dialogue is not clever, but it is full of action, noise and gore. Mr. Asche's robust personality and powerful voice are exactly suited to the part of the Count.

There was a great deal of applause. Mr. Asche should feel very proud of the hearty reception he received on his return to the London stage.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

A HOMESPUN HEROINE

his oars glistened like jewels. The surroundings, were beautiful, and Lady Castlemere, pleased with her company, looked radiant. She had been so terribly bored for the last few days! At the best of times she did not find her husband's society very exhilarating, and busy as he was from morning to night looking after a place that he had systematically neglected for a good many years, she hardly set eyes on him, whilst some guests that were coming to make her own home bearable for her had not yet arrived.

But now that a boy, and a very good-looking boy, susceptible too, and ready to adore herself, had crossed her path, things would not be so bad. If she utterly turned his head—if she gave him a heartache that would last for many a day—well! it could not be helped!

If he made her exile in this, the most out-of-the-way corner in the British Isles less irksome, she must leave the rest to chance.

So she stayed out with him on the lake for hours in the pretty, brightly painted cockleshell, that was so easy for him to row, and so easy for her to steer, and in which there was only room for two.

She was dressed in white—he wondered why women did not always dress in white—and a vision of the rough bicycling skirts of the O'Connor girls, short, serviceable, and generally muddy, came before him!

Useful! perhaps—but there was no need for women looking useful. Now Lady Castlemere looked more like an exquisite bit of Dresden china, as fragile, as dainty, and as wonderfully finished—he wished Bridget could see her and perhaps imitate her. He would try and describe her to the O'Connors—no, not to Norah, she would only laugh; Biddy might have more sense, but the more he looked at Lady Castlemere, the less equal he felt to the task; and the more he looked, the more he fell under her spell. Day after day he went to Castlemere, and did her bidding like a slave, and poor Biddy, though she never came down to the lake now, nor indeed went much from home, knew in some mysterious way that the great lady had stolen Derrick from her.

"Ah! Miss Biddy," said the old woman who now and then walked the six miles from the lake to sell fish to the O'Connor family, "it's not a woman she is, but a witch"—needless to say she was discussing Lady Castlemere. "She has laid the comether on Mr. Derry till the pure crature's soul's not his own. A black shame it is that she should look at any one but his lordship, and he such a fine man too. Can't she leave the boys alone for such as we and Miss Norah?" but though Biddy turned the conversation by reflecting on the fish that the old lady was selling, the foolish words hurt her all the same.

But Lady Castlemere had other surprises in store for her neighbors, the last being in their eyes positively epoch-making.

"Biddy! Biddy! I've got news for you," screamed Norah one afternoon, as the former returned from a rather sad and lonely walk, "what do you think? A groom has just brought over from Castlemere an invitation to a dance. A dance, Biddy, next week, and you and I have never been out from the shore now, and Derrick talk it over."

"But our frocks," said Bridget, after the first excitement was over, "we've got nothing to wear."

"Oh! nonsense," said Norah, "we'll manage something—besides, what's wrong with our white muslins?"

"Nothing's right about them," said Bridget, who was not the optimist that Norah was when it suited her.

But the white muslin frocks, well washed, almost over-starched, and decorated with the scarlet rowan-berries were their fate, and as "a bonny face is easily buskit," Bridget O'Connor looked as pretty an any girl could look when she started for Castlemere.

Perhaps when she arrived there the effect was not quite so good. It was unfortunate the village inn owned no covered carriage, and that what is known familiarly in those parts as "the long car" was the only available conveyance.

There were eight or ten of the neighbors bidden to the dance, and they must be satisfied with a vehicle capable of taking them all.

They must pray for a fine night, that was all—there was nothing else to be done.

But those prayers, if offered, were not answered, for what with rain and wind, a worse night for the occasion could not have been found.

The hood of Biddy's cloak was blown off her head half a dozen times, a muffler that Norah had twisted round hers was whirled by a sudden gust of wind over miles of bog, and the starch was well out of the muslin frocks, which were even a trifle damp and splashed, when their wearers arrived at Castlemere.

Biddy's pretty cheeks were flaming as she entered the ballroom, and her hair was still rather wild and dishevelled, and though "her ladyship's own maid" had done her best for her, the result was not very satisfactory. It is difficult to drive to a ball on a "long car," and look spic and span; the scarlet berries, arranged with so much care and taste, were slightly crushed, the frocks in much the same condition, and Derrick, who had hardly taken his eyes off Lady Castlemere since he arrived, was distinctly disappointed when he caught sight of the two girls. Her beautiful ladyship was so simply dressed; she would have thought it quite wrong to have been over smart at a small dance given by herself in the wilds of the country, but her simplicity was the simplicity of Paris, and the draperies of her soft, white gown were classical in the beauty of their lines. But she looked happier gayer—than any of her guests, most of whom were a trifle awkward and ill at ease.

"Just look at her," whispered Norah to her sister when chance threw them together for a moment. "She has danced and amused herself all her life, and yet she seems far happier than any of us who consider this evening such an important event. I can't help watching her as she goes flying round with Derrick, she looks so gay and brilliant. Of course, she has taken the best dancer in the room, but if she was dancing with the King himself, she couldn't appear to be better pleased."

"She looks as happy as a child," said poor Biddy dolefully.

"That's just what I say," returned the other, "and yet she's old enough to be our mother."

"Oh! that's nonsense, Norah," said her less prejudiced sister; "you know quite well that Lady Castlemere can't be more than thirty."

"She will never see five-and-thirty again," answered Norah quite spitefully, and then their partners appeared on the scene, and the talk of the two girls was interrupted.

It was, as Norah prophesied, an evening long remembered by the neighbors, all the more as a day or two afterwards the Castlemeres departed unexpectedly, an invitation to meet Royalty having caused them to curtail their stay in the West.

Lady Castlemere had turned so many heads in her day, that she hardly understood that she had done something more this time, and had left Derrick Burke with a heartache that would not stop throbbing.

How could she tell—she who had never time to give a thought to the past—that the present was as nothing to her latest victim?

The paths that her feet had trod, the wood walks she said she loved, the lake on which he had lived golden hours alone with her, he cared for nothing else, thought of nothing else, and not only Bridget, but all the world was as nothing to him.

He had no work to distract him, being blessed or cursed with the very small competence of an out-at-the-elbows Irish landlord; he was an idle man in a country given up to idleness, and had nothing much to do either in the way of business or pleasure.

So when spring came he tried to persuade himself that he had made up his mind months ago to go to London, hardly owning even to himself that he was going to take Lady Castlemere at her word.

When she had said good-bye to him in autumn, her parting speech had been, "You will be in London soon, my poor boy" (she could not imagine a life spent for ever away from London!) "and when you are over you must come and see me first thing—first thing, remember," and she shook her pretty finger at him as she spoke, as if fearful that he might be beguiled away from her. But she need not have been afraid. It was Lady Castlemere rather than London that took him across the Channel. What was London to him? He knew no one there—no one at least that counted.

He had wondered for weeks what the best time of the day would be for him to go and see her, and his choice of an hour was not a fortunate one. Three in the afternoon had seemed to him the most likely time to find her alone, before she went out driving. So as the clock struck three he was shown into a great, bare magnificent room in her splendid house, to wait for an audience. The time seemed interminable before the door again noiselessly opened, and he was requested by an important looking butler to follow him to her ladyship's boudoir, and there, after eight weary months, he saw her at last. She was dressed in white, as usual—in that, at least, there was no change, but everything else was different—her look—her smile—her manner—herself.

She had a cigarette in her pretty mouth, but so had the half-dozen people—men as well as women—who surrounded her, and who, though as smart and well dressed as herself and the women almost as good-looking, appeared to hang on her words and smile delightedly at all she said. The room had pink satin walls—everything it contained seemed a work of art—there were flowers everywhere, and the scent of roses was almost overpowering. The voices and laughter were hushed for a moment, and every eye was turned curiously on the new arrival; his hostess alone showed no surprise, but holding out her hand, her left hand too, as if she was in the habit of seeing him every day, she greeted him with a charming, but slightly artificial, smile: "Delighted to see you, Mr. Burke" (it had been "Derrick" on the shores of Lough Moyna!) "the last time we met was in County Mayo. Have you been over long?"

A sort of shame paralyzed Derrick; he had been shy enough before, had felt something like an interloper in that society, but now that his only reason for being there—obedience to her wishes—was gone, he could have died of mortification.

He was a mistake, a failure, and he saw it all at once.

Had there been any doubt on that point it would have been dispelled, when a young man with a comical face got up, and told Lady Castlemere with a word of meaning, that it was time for him to be going, and when the others followed suit, and he found himself alone with the woman who had bewitched him. The moment he had hoped for, longed for, all the long dreary winter had come, and it now resolved itself into this—into a meaningless talk with a pretty, listless woman who lay on a sofa and smoked, and who, when she had finally got him to talk, smothered a yawn as she did so. Her face was as lovely as ever, the jewel was even more beautifully set, but—it was hard to believe that he had ever had her to himself, had rowed her for hours on a lovely lake, had taken her hand in his as they wandered through the deep woods of Castlemere, had loved her, and oh! the folly of it! had thought himself beloved.

Listen to what she is saying to him now: "And that pretty girl who had such a fancy for you, and for whom you had a fancy too, I expect, pretty Miss Bridget—I forget her name—how is she getting on? When am I

"The Beer With A Reputation"
Is Better Than Any Imported Lager

"Imported" does not mean "better". It simply means "higher prices" because of the excessive duty.

It is a Government regulation that all Canadian lagers must be brewed only from barley malt, hops and water,—which cannot be said of any American lager.

O'Keefe's "Pilsener" costs about half as much as imported brands—and is their superior in every respect—in purity, in flavor, in wholesomeness.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I WANT to have a little chat today with the people who write letters to me suggesting subjects for me to talk about in this column.

And the first thing I want to say and the most emphatic is — THANK YOU.

Of course I'm "delighted," as our friend of the obvious teeth would say, to know what you people want discussed in this column.

An actor, no matter how good his talents and his intentions were, would probably find it hard to please if he played to an invisible and inaudible audience, and that's what we writer folks are always doing. So you can see that any epistolary echo of the feelings of that audience is always very welcome.

And never more so than when it brings a constructive suggestion.

Please keep it up, you folks who have taken enough interest in me to suggest some topics you'd like to hear discussed. And please take it up, you people who have thought of something that "would be good for Ruth Cameron to write about," but haven't quite gotten around to putting it down on paper and sending it along.

Once more "Please."

And that is, please don't be offended when I don't write on the topics you suggest.

Much as I'd like to oblige, that isn't always possible.

It isn't that the subjects aren't just as good as many of my own. It's just that I'm not a penny in the slot machine into which you can drop a topic and inevitably get a half a dozen of remarks. I have to feel that I have something to say.

For instance, some time ago someone asked me to please write on "The detestable and filthy habit of chewing gum in public." I haven't complied with the request because it seemed to me that anything I might say would be so ridiculously obvious. I don't believe I have a reader who doesn't know that it is bad form to chew gum in public, and anyone who does it in spite of that knowledge, will undoubtedly continue to do it, no matter what I may say.

I am also asked to write about some special cases which do not seem to me to have enough of the universal in them to make them interesting. For instance. After writing about the unkind way in which the dependent, the maiden aunt or helpless grandfather or grandmother, is often treated—an unkindness which I think anyone will admit is cruelly common—I was requested to write about "the person, entirely dependent on a man for absolutely everything, who, on being taken into the household and asked to become a member of the family, and take his share of the family life, declines to do so, but perpetually demands to be treated as a guest of honour, retires insulted if not so treated, who, in short, if not always and ever considered before everyone else raises wails to any friends or strangers willing to give ear to his complaints."

Such people may exist, but I certainly don't think the type is common enough to make a denunciation of it helful or interesting to any large number of readers.

I am also asked to write on subjects which cannot be treated in a general way because they are of a class in which "circumstances alter cases." for instance: "How late a man should stay when he comes to call." "How long a time ought to elapse between a first and second marriage."

My correspondents occasionally inquire. "Do you live up to all you write?" If you do, you must be an angel."

Of course I don't.

The lines of conduct I suggest are my ideals. Do you know anyone who lives up to all his ideals?

But I think I can truthfully say one thing. I never write anything I don't thoroughly believe.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

A Daily Thought.

Disappointments are wings that bear the soul skyward.

Then followed that beautiful season,
Called by the pious Acadian peasants
Our women's All Saints!
Filled was the air with a dreamy and magical light; and the landscape
Lay as if new-created in all the freshness of childhood.
Peace seemed to reign upon earth and the restless heart of the ocean
Was for a moment consoled. All sounds were in harmony blended.
All were subdued and low as the murmur of love, and the great sun
Looked with the eye of love through the golden vapours around him,
While arrayed in the robes of russet and scarlet and yellow,
Bright with the gleam of the dew, each glittering tree of the forest
Flamed like the pomegranate, the Persian adorned with mantles and jewels.

Longfellow.

Being Agreeable.

The true art of being agreeable is to appear well pleased with all the company and rather to seem well entertained with them than to give entertainment to them. A man thus disposed, perhaps, may not have much learning, not any wit; but if he have commonsense or something friendly in his behaviour, it conciliates men more than the brightest talents without this disposition; and later a man of such a turn is almost sure to be treated with respect.

It is true, indeed, that he should not dissemble and flatter, in company; but a man may be very agreeable, strictly consistent with truth and sincerity, by a prudent silence where he cannot concur, and a pleasant assent where he can.

Now and then you meet with a person so exactly formed to please that he will gain upon every one that hears or beholds him; this disposition is not merely the gift of nature, but frequently the effect of much knowledge of the world and a command over the passions.—Selected.

May Easily Look Tall.

"She's a little person, yet you always think of her as being tall," said a physical culturist of an actress the other day. "She is, measuring by the rule, below normal. Yet she manages by study and art to look fully up to the average.

"There is something in this that might be applied to drawing-room use. This actress, who manages to look tall in spite of the fact that she is short, has a few rules which she observes from year to year, no matter what the style.

"She always tries to keep her arms hanging at her side. This is a difficult thing to accomplish gracefully. The woman who can let her arms hang without swinging them or twisting them in some unseemly fashion is rarely found. The trick is simply to let them dangle; Ada Rehan did this to perfection.

"She is particular about her walk. She never walks with the quick, snappy little steps of the short person. She has a tread that is rather long and stately. She does not stride, but she never trots along after the style of most short women.

"All short women should learn to wear long lines. This is what every dressmaker will tell you, but the best modiste in the world will fail to make you graceful if you are not willing to help a little yourself.

"The little woman should always carry her chin up. This adds much to her height. With her hair up, her chin high and her train at least six inches on the ground, the short-set woman can get up an appearance of height."

Theatre Caps.

A Paris correspondent in speaking of the edict that has gone forth in the past year, relative to the abolishment of hats in the theatres, says that at first it was felt that this would be a crushing blow to the Parisian, whose splendid headgear has always distracted attention from the stage. But with their usual resourcefulness, no sooner was the hat banished than the cap took its place. Of these caps the writer says:

"They are the most adorable affairs that have as yet been produced, for they are becoming, they may be worn with or without a hat, and they keep in place every stray lock or tress. There are half a dozen shapes, each and every one more charming than the other. Some are veritable little nightcaps, made of the most filmy lace, always gold or silver. These fit tightly down over the hair, have a band of some stunning passementerie, with a bow and end at the left side, and from under this band a lace ruffle, which falls about the face and neck."

SOME RECIPES.

Cheese Souffle.

Pin a narrow, folded paper thoroughly buttered on the inside around six or eight ramequins and butter the ramequins thoroughly. Melt two tablespoonfuls butter and in it cook two tablespoonfuls of flour and a quarter teaspoonful each salt and paprika. When the mixture looks frothy, stir in half a cup of milk and stir until boiling. Then add four ounces grated cheese and the beaten yolks of three eggs. Lastly fold in the stiffly whipped whites of the three eggs. Put the mixture into the ramequins, letting it come up to the paper, by nearly to the top of the dishes. Set the ramequins on many folds of paper in a dish, pour in boiling water to half fill and let bake in a moderate oven until the mixture is well puffed up and firm to the touch. Remove the buttered papers, set the ramequins in place, and serve at once. A green vegetable salad, seasoned with French dressing and browned crackers, may accompany the dish.

Barbecued Rabbit.

Grease the rabbit all over with butter and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Lay on a gridiron, turn over often, cook till done. When done put in a pan with plenty of butter and set in the oven for fifteen minutes. Make sauce of four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one of mustard, two of currant jelly and one teaspoonful of lemon juice, mixed together. Pour over the rabbit and serve.

Pickled Onions.

Use for this the tiny button onions. Peel and cover with hot brine; let stand over night, reheat the brine and pour over again. The third morning drain, make fresh brine, throw the onions in and boil four minutes. Take out, throw quickly in cold water and leave for six hours. Drain. To each gallon of white wine vinegar required to cover the onions allow one cupful sugar with fresh mixed spices and celery seed to season. Pour this scalding hot over the onions for two mornings in succession, then while boiling hot put in glass cans. Will be ready for use in two weeks or less and will keep indefinitely.

WAS REDUCED TO A SKELETON

GIVEN UP BY THE DOCTORS AND PREPARED TO DIE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" SAVED HER LIFE

The days of the miracle have not passed away. Every day—almost every hour—"Fruit-a-tives" is performing miracles of healing in some part of our country! One does not ordinarily think of miracles in connection with fruit juices—and yet it is fruit juices that are changing sick, helpless, and sometimes dying, people into happy, healthy men and women. Here is just one case in which the cure made by "Fruit-a-tives" was nothing short of a miracle.

MADAME ARTHUR TOURANGEAU.

Madame Tourangeau suffered for eleven years and was finally given up to die by her physicians. Yet "Fruit-a-tives"—the marvellous remedy made of fruit juices—completely cured her and restored her to health.

Here is her letter—read it—study it—profit by it.

RIVIÈRE À PIERRE, CO. PORTNEUF, QUE., May 9th, 1910

"I look upon my recovery as nothing short of a miracle I was for eleven years, constantly suffering from Chronic Dyspepsia and Indigestion with Constipation. The last two years of my illness, I was confined to my bed nearly all the time. I was treated by several doctors and they simply did me no good. During the latter part of my illness, I was so thin that I weighed only 90 pounds, and I vomited everything I ate. Even water would not stay on my stomach.

The doctors gave me up to die as the stomach trouble produced heart weakness and I was frequently unconscious. I received the Last Rites of The Church and looked forward to death in a short time. I was reduced to a skeleton.

At this time, a lady friend strongly urged me to try "Fruit-a-tives" and how thankful I am that I did so. When I had taken one box, I was much better and after three boxes, I was practically well again and had gained 20 pounds. I have taken 13 boxes in all and now weigh 150 pounds and am absolutely well—no pain—no indigestion—no constipation—my heart is sound—and complexion clear.

For the sake of other sufferers, I give you permission to publish my letter and photograph."

MADAME ARTHUR TOURANGEAU.

The stomach is a bag about a foot long and six inches wide, covered by a muscular coat and lined with delicate membrane. This lining membrane should pour out for each meal about a pint of Digestive Fluid called Gastric Juice, which dissolves or digests the food.

During digestion, the muscular coat squeezes and presses the food from one end of the stomach to the other, and this churning mixes the food with the Gastric Juice. If the food is not churned properly, or if the Gastric Juice is weak—then the food is not dissolved properly and Indigestion and Chronic Dyspepsia result.

Gastric Juice comes from the blood—and the only way to have strong, active Gastric Juice is to keep the blood pure by keeping the bowels and kidneys regular, and the skin active.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Indigestion, Sour Stomach and Chronic Dyspepsia because the fruit juices act on liver, bowels, kidneys and skin, purifying the blood. "Fruit-a-tives" relieves any irritation in the stomach—strengthens the muscular coat—and ensures the Gastric Juice being full strength and abundant. If you have any Stomach Weakness or Trouble of Digestion, by all means take "Fruit-a-tives". 50c a box—6 for $2.50—trial size, 25c. Sent on receipt of price, if your dealer does not handle them, by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Wainwright

FOUR GOOD REASONS WHY

Wainwright will Make one of the Leading Cities of Western Canada
Investments in Wainwright Property will Prove Highly Profitable

Trade Centre of Rich Farming District

WAINWRIGHT is situated on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific in Eastern Alberta. It is 127 miles east of Edmonton and 200 miles west of Saskatoon, and is easily the largest, busiest and best town between those points.

WAINWRIGHT is but two years old, yet it has 1,000 population, property assessed for taxation at $750,000, half a mile of cement sidewalks, an $18,000 brick school, two brick yards, substantial business blocks and residences, some of them constructed from home made brick, two big hotels and all the various lines of business that go to make up a live bustling town.

WAINWRIGHT has tributary to it one of the finest farming districts in Alberta a district especially adapted to grain growing, mixed farming and ranching. Of the 100,000 acres immediately tributary to the town, 50,000 acres are of the choicest Alberta Red Wheat land which produced an average of 22 bushels to the acre in 1910 against an average of 15 bushels for all Western Canada. 30,000 acres are suitable for mixed farming, and 20,000 acres are the finest grazing land on the continent.

WAINWRIGHT'S territory includes a portion of the famous Cut Knife country, admittedly one of the finest farming sections of all Canada. But a small percentage of the land has been broken up, but the yields of grains, vegetables and root crops have been enormous. Yields of 40 to 50 bushels of wheat and 75 to 90 bushels of oats are not an common, and the quality is the best. No finer potatoes are grown in the Dominion. The climate is tempered by the Japan Current; there is plenty of precipitation during the growing season, and the long summer days and hot sunshine are conducive to rapid growth of vegetation.

Distribution Point for Many Good Towns

WAINWRIGHT is rapidly achieving renown as a wholesale distributing point, and it is well known that it is distribution that makes cities. As a distributing centre, Wainwright is without a rival between Saskatoon and Edmonton. It enjoys a decided advantage over the latter point in through freight rates, an advantage which big concerns have been quick to realize.

WAINWRIGHT, although but two years old, is the distributing centre for four large concerns the International Harvester Co., the Massey-Harris Co., the Imperial Oil Co., and A. McDonald & Co., who use it as a base from which to supply the retail trade for a distance of 50 miles east and 70 miles west on the Main Line of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

WAINWRIGHT will be the head and operating base of the Battleford branch of the G. T. P., to be built along the fertile valley of Battle River next year. This branch will tap one of the oldest and one of the richest agricultural sections of Alberta, and will make an important contribution to Wainwright's trade territory. The new towns that will spring up along this line will look to Wainwright for their supplies, and the products of this district will go to Wainwright to reach the Main Line of the G. T. P. for shipment to eastern and western markets.

WAINWRIGHT retail merchants will be enabled to buy goods as cheaply at home as they will in Edmonton, and by saving the local freight on them, will have a considerable advantage over competing towns.

Divisional Headquarters G. T. R. Railway

WAINWRIGHT is one of the principal divisional points on the Grand Trunk Pacific Main Line. That the railroad company expected it to be an operating base of no little importance is evidenced by the fact that it located there a 12-stall roundhouse, repair shop, a $12,000 depot and 14 miles of side tracks.

WAINWRIGHT has about 80 resident railway employees, and their monthly payroll is approximately $7,000. Practically all this money is paid to Wainwright merchants or is put into Wainwright real estate and improvements. As traffic on the Main Line of the G. T. P. increases, and with the opening up of the Battleford branch, the force of resident railway employees will be largely increased.

WAINWRIGHT, being division headquarters, is the home of not only train crews, shopmen and trackmen, but of superintendent, roadmaster, foremen, dispatcher, clerks and other officials who command good salaries and are a substantial addition to the business and social life of a town. Many of these railroad employees have built good homes in Wainwright during the past year, while a large number of them are putting a portion of their earnings each month in Wainwright real estate as an investment.

WAINWRIGHT has a wide-awake, energetic class of business men who, through the local Board of Trade, are unceasing in their endeavours to advance the interests of the city. The city officials and councillors are men of the same stamp, and the permanent and substantial character of all public improvements show that they believe in the town and in providing for its inevitable growth in population.

Location of the National Buffalo Park

WAINWRIGHT is the location of the Canadian Government's National Buffalo Park, the home of the largest herd of Buffalo in the world. This park which adjoins the town on the south, contains 110,000 acres of fine grazing land, fenced with an 8-foot woven wire fence, which alone cost $75,000. In the park are upwards of 800 Buffalo, gathered together from various points, principally from the few remaining herds and groups in the States. Recently as told in the press dispatches, a shipment of 29 head was received from Montana, where the entire Pablo herd, the largest on the continent, was purchased. The park contains also several moose, deer and other animals.

WAINWRIGHT, because of its Buffalo Park and other points of interest to visitors, is destined to become one of the leading attractions for tourists on the continent. It has now the only remaining herd of buffalo worthy the name. Under the conditions in the National Buffalo Park it is believed that the animals will multiply in numbers, and that as a result of the action of the Dominion Government in establishing this park, the extinction of the North American Bison will be prevented.

WAINWRIGHT and its Buffalo Park will be featured in the advertising of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and in the literature of the Dominion government. With two such institutions as the greatest transcontinental railway on the continent and the Canadian Government back of it, there is little likelihood that the world will be allowed to overlook Wainwright.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

Now Makes Its First Public Offering of Lots in Sub-Division Adjoining Original Townsite of Wainwright

Wainwright Has Never Been Boomed

You do not remember ever having seen before any newspaper advertisement offering for sale lots in the Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite of Wainwright. It is a fact that this is the first time that the G. T. P. has undertaken to call the attention of the public especially to Wainwright. Nevertheless practically all of the original townsite laid out by the railroad has been sold, and for several months past the G. T. P. has been importuned to put this subdivision on the market in order that the additional desirable building sites close in and convenient to the school and the churches might be available.

Wainwright, like Topsy, "just grew." It grew because people who investigated it were convinced that it would be the site of an important city, therefore a good place to live in, a good place to transact business in, and a good place to make money on real estate investments. Not having had a boom, Wainwright has never had a back-set. It has grown steadily every month, is still growing, and will continue to grow.

During 1910 fully 100 buildings have been erected, among them being several modern frame and brick residences costing up to $3,500. In September, 25 buildings were in course of construction or under contract to be completed this year. Already many new buildings have been planned for next year. There is not a vacant house in town, and there is a demand for rental property of all kinds.

Millions Made In New Towns

A hundred million dollars was made in 1910 by investors in town lots in Western Canada towns—not by people who thought about investing, but by those who actually invested. This enormous sum represents the increase in value of town property resulting from the growth of the towns and the development of the surrounding country.

At least a hundred millions more will be made in 1911 by those who invest in town lots—not by those who just think about investing, but by those who actually invest. You can pick out any one of a score of western Canada towns and they will point out to you lots which sold a few years at $100 to $300, which to-day are worth $1,000 to $10,000. Take any of these towns—Edmonton, Calgary, Regina, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Lethbridge, Brandon, Prince Albert—fortunes have been made by scores who invested a few dollars in town lots when these towns were young.

There will be an immense development in Western Canada in the next few years. It is a country capable of supporting many millions of people a country of practically unlimited natural resources to be developed. These coming millions must have trade centres where they can market their products and from which they may draw their supplies. Scores of the towns of to-day will be cities with more thousands of inhabitants than they now have hundreds. Real estate values grow with population. There are fortunes awaiting those who buy now and participate in the advance.

The Time To Buy for Big Profit

The time in the history of a new town to buy for big, sure profit is after its permanency has been assured, and before it has reached the stage where its future growth is discounted in real estate values. The opportunities for the investor of moderate means do not exist now in Edmonton, Calgary, Moose Jaw, Regina, Saskatoon and such towns that existed a few years ago. They have reached the point where their growth for years to come has been discounted, and where real estate values are based not alone on what they are, but on what they are expected to be.

In investing in a brand new town there is always the risk that it will not amount to much. The time to invest the only safe and sure time is after the town has demonstrated that it has behind it forces which will insure its success, and before real estate prices are based on what the town PROMISES TO BE, rather than on what it IS.

Wainwright is just now at the stage when real estate values are based on the present, and when buyers can depend upon reaping the benefit of future growth. In a few weeks Wainwright will be one of the best known and most talked-of towns in Western Canada. Investors who have not hitherto had their attention called to it will be seeking investments there. Those who buy now will have the full benefit of the rush for lots which is sure to come soon.

The prices fixed on the lots in the new subdivision are low. The object is to build up the town, attract business men and capitalists. The G. T. P. will reap its reward, not from the money received for these lots, but from the increased traffic which it will secure in and out of Wainwright.

Buy Now and Get First Choice

This advertisement marks the beginning of a campaign of publicity which will attract the attention of investors throughout Canada and the States to Wainwright. Naturally the best that the G. T. P. has to offer at Wainwright is included in this sub-division—THE FIRST SUB-DIVISION ADJOINING THE ORIGINAL G. T. P. TOWNSITE that has been offered. This sub-division immediately adjoins the original town, which is built right up to it. The new $18,000 school house occupies a block right across the street from this subdivision. The block recently purchased for the site of a new Catholic Church is right across the street from it.

Every lot in the addition lies well. The addition is high, overlooking the town, and practically level open prairie. It is not necessary for purchasers to specify the particular lot or lots they desire. Wire your reservation, stating number of lots and price you wish to pay. We shall select the best lots for the price. We have a representative who is familiar with the ground and the choice lots will be selected in the order in which applications are received.

If the selection of lots made by our representative is not satisfactory, the Grand Trunk Pacific stands ready to give you your choice of the remaining lots at the same price, or refund all your payments. WE ADVISE THAT YOU DO NOT DELAY BUT TELEGRAPH RESERVATION AT OUR EXPENSE. Let remittance follow by next mail in this way you will get the pick of the choice lots. A delay of a day may mean a difference of a block in the location of your lots.

Russell Sage, who accumulated an immense fortune, said: "Real estate is an imperishable asset, ever increasing in value it is the most solid security that human ingenuity has ever devised. It is the basis of all security and about the only indestructible security."

Andrew Carnegie says in the "Empire of Business:" "Ninety per cent. of all millionaires become so through growing real estate. More money has been made in real estate than from all industrial investments combined."

Hetty Green's advise to women is: "I advise women to invest in real estate. It is the collateral to be preferred above all others, and the safest means of investing money."

A HOMESPUN HEROINE

to congratulate you? I know it will come to that one of these days. I will send you such a nice present—you deserve it, for you were so good to me last autumn—how you used to row me about on that lake, and how damp and chilly it was," and she gave a little shudder, "but you minded nothing, and tried—"

She was talking prettily and kindly, but indifferently, and surely he saw her glance at a tiny watch, that in the shape of a diamond ball, hung from her wrist.

It did not much matter that he was going, leaving the questions that she had only asked out of politeness, unanswered.

There was no good in staying. This Lady Castlemere was a stranger to him; she had nothing in common with his Lady of the Lake—they were two different people. "But you will come and see me again before you go back to Ireland," he heard her say when he had stumbled to his feet, but she made no effort to keep him now, though she said he must return.

"I think not," he said, and he could not get out another word.

She looked up at him with lack-lustre eyes; she did not much care whether he came back or not, and she cared very much about a lovely new frock she was to wear this afternoon at Hurlinghame.

He was a very nice boy, and she had liked him immensely last autumn, but he would keep till next autumn, when she would see plenty of him if Castlemere insisted on dragging her to the West of Ireland.

Till then—"Well, good-bye, Mr. Derrick, if it must be good-bye, and au revoir in a month or two at Castlemere."

But when autumn came, her ladyship flatly refused to go there. "One can't be bored every year," she said sweetly but firmly; "it was bad enough last autumn, but no one could possibly expect me to endure such a time so soon again," and her husband having felt the iron hand under the velvet glove before now, did not press the point.

There is no saying what Derrick would have done had she come back. It is possible that the spell would have been cast round him once more, and that she would have lured him to her side again, but as time rolled on, the remembrance of the woman he had once adored began to fade, while the cold looks and distant manner of Bridget O'Connor were ever present to annoy and pique him.

And then our heroine thawed a little but grew less cold, and not quite so distant, till at last the little world, which was all their world, was informed of a fact that they declared they had known for long, a fact that would result in the "beautifullest wedding ever seen on the shores of Lough Moyna," and might or might not bring Derrick the lovely present so distinctly promised by Lady Castlemere!

TITLED SCHOOL BOYS

Many of England's Noblemen Send Their Sons to Eton

Eton College maintains its reputation as a school for noblemen. This term the proportion of young aristocrats studying there is unusually large. It includes two Princes—George of Teck, and a Siamese action—and sixteen peers or heirs to peerages. There are three sons of Dukes one of a Marquis, and eleven sons of Earls. Among these blue-blooded boys are either heirs to or owners of fifty-three titles of peerage—many of them being pluralists in the matter of titles—and they will one day be lords of something like 680,000 acres of land, with forty-two town and country mansions.

A MONKEY STORY

It Comes from Paris Where Many Strange Things Happen

As a party of work girls came out of a dressmaker's shop in the Rue Boileau in Paris the other day, an arm encircled the waist of one of them.

The girl protested indignantly. The too gallant intruder was well dressed in a frock coat, grey trousers, top hat, patent leather boots, and wore smart grey suede gloves. But he was a hideous looking person.

The girls began making fun of him, when suddenly he caught hold of one of them and put his face close to hers. She boxed his ears and he dropped on all fours and bit her leg.

There was a panic. The girls rushed off shrieking, and two policemen arrested the aggressor. The creature was a chimpansee, the pet of an explorer living near at hand. He was captured after a struggle and taken to the police station, where he spent the night.

AN ANCIENT KING

The Remains of a Saxon Monarch Found at Aix-la-Chapelle

Archaeologists and historians are interested in the announcement that workmen among the foundations of the cathedral at Aix-la-Chapelle have come across a casket which contains what is supposed to be the missing remains of Otto III., Emperor of the Saxons, who ruled in the latter days of the tenth and died early in the eleventh century.

Otto III. died at the head of his army at Ravenna, where he expected to be joined by German troops, for the purpose of crushing the Roman hosts who were besieging his castle. Later his remains were removed to Aix-la-Chapelle, where he had expressed the wish to be buried alongside Emperor Charlemagne. The remains proved to be in a state of utter decomposition when the casket was opened, the bones crumbling into dust as soon as touched. The sarcophagus will be restored and reburied with fitting reverence.

PETERBOROUGH'S POWER QUESTION AS SEEN BY COMMISSION

the total or partial elimination of the head at the waterworks dam. The head at the waterworks property, being not more than 10 feet, anything short of the complete drowning out of the dam would appear to be poor policy, as it would result in the ruin of the property as a commercial proposition.

For the reasons above mentioned, it is highly probable that the Auburn property could best be handled by developing for a head of 15 feet and ultimately developing the waterworks property to full capacity, the two plants to be run in parallel. Under these conditions, against the additional administration charges due to the operation of two separate plants, could be placed the annual charge on the excessive investment necessary to cover the land damages which would result from combining the two heads at Auburn.

At Burleigh Falls the changing or adapting of topographical conditions is primarily in the hands of the canal authorities. The conditions at present existing at Burleigh are such as to make the capital cost of development per horse-power lower than the average, and further changes contemplated by the canal authorities will tend to make conditions still more favourable for the power interest. At Burleigh the item of land damages will be entirely eliminated and the capital costs of permanent works substantially less than at Auburn.

Titles

The property at Auburn is held under a deed and a clear title can be obtained by purchase. The property and privileges at Burleigh are privately held under two leases, one of which was granted by the Dominion Government. It seems clear from the conditions contained in it that the Provincial lease is forfeited, but the conditions of the Dominion lease are of such a general and indefinite nature that there is considerable uncertainty as to what right the lessee holds under it. In this connection it seems advisable to get information on the following points:

1. Has the Dominion Government any right to, or control of, surplus water after the purposes of navigation have been satisfied, except where it has purchased property rights? Otherwise, is the surplus water not the property of the Provincial Government?

2. Are the rights and privileges of a lessee from the Dominion Government of such a nature as to be subject to expropriation proceedings under a Statute of the Provincial Legislature?

If these questions can be cleared up and the Burleigh site purchased under reasonable conditions, or otherwise acquired, there seems to be no doubt, all things being considered, that this site is better adapted to the needs of the city of Peterborough than any other location on the river, Auburn included. In the event of the city's demand ultimately exceeding the capacity of the Burleigh plant, the full capacity of the waterworks dam could be developed and the two operated in parallel. With these two plants to draw on, the city would be safe in overselling the installed capacity by a considerable amount.

The estimate submitted herewith is for the development of the full capacity of the Burleigh site under present conditions, with provision for efficient operation under a definite increment of head. The estimate includes the capital charges for development, step-up transformation, transmission, step-down transformation at Peterborough, engineering contingencies, and interest during investment, maintenance and depreciation, operation and lost power.

In conclusion it must be understood that the function of this report is purely advisory, and that before any definite action is taken towards development, a detailed survey should be made of any site that may be ultimately chosen, from which plans and estimates may be prepared, which will show whether or not the project is one which the municipality can handle with safety and profit.

Estimate based on the development of full capacity of Burleigh Falls under 22-foot head, and a net delivery of 1,850 horse power at Peterborough, permanent works being constructed for operation under an ultimate head of 26 feet and a net delivery of 2,150 horse power at Peterborough.

THE HOWRY FAMILY WELL KNOWN HERE

An item appeared in a newspaper of Anaconda, U.S.A., recently that will be of interest to many people in this district, inasmuch as it refers to the Howry family, which some years ago was prominent in the lumbering interests in Haliburton and Victoria Counties. The Howry Company operated large mills at Fenelon Falls and owned valuable limits. They met with business reverses, however, and to-day the hum of their big mill lives only in the memories of the older residents. It would appear from the following that the Howrys are still big operators in various lines. The Anaconda Exchange says:

Charging that he has been euchred out of a large portion of his father's estate, H. K. Howry of Helena, Mont., sues his brother and his brother's wife for $200,000. He alleges that they have so manipulated the large cattle interests left to them by their father, through the organization of three stock companies to deal in land and cattle, that he had been defrauded out of at least that amount.

The defendants are now residents of Southern Colorado. H. K. Howry demands an accounting of his brother and wife of the profits of the companies they organized and are alleged to have frozen him out of through illegal transactions.

The property involved is one of the most valuable cattle ranches in New Mexico. Of late years the Howry family saw many vicissitudes, going through bankruptcy in the federal court of Massachusetts after they had failed for more than $100,000 in the lumber business, borrowing hundreds of thousands of dollars to redeem the New Mexico estate, which at one time had 5,000 head of cattle on it.

After the death of the father, J. K. Howry, one of the sons, John H., and wife organized the companies named in the complaint and H. K. Howry claims four-ninths of the stock in them.

What is the practical benefit of anniversaries, religious, national and personal?

Verse 18—Has Jesus the right today, as in that day, to invite himself and friends to any man's house? Why?

Was Jesus' "time" for his crucifixion, a necessary or a contingent event, i.e., was the event fixed by God, or would he have preferred that the Jews had accepted and not rejected Jesus?

Verse 21—Did James know that Judas was going to betray him from passing events, or supernaturally? Give your reasons.

If human actions are contingent, and not necessary, how can God know in advance what they are going to be?

Verses 22-23—Were the loyal disciples actually in doubt as to whether they were going to betray Jesus, and, whether or not, what was their state of mind?

Are there some acts which we may be absolutely sure we will never commit, or should we always stand in doubt of ourselves? Give your reasons.

What blessed purposes are served by keeping up the Lord's supper?

Verses 29-30—Will there be eating and drinking in heaven, and, whether or not, what did Jesus mean by these words?

A DEADLOCK AT BRANTFORD

The Police Commissioners of Brantford, acting against the expressed wishes of the City Council, some months ago purchased a patrol wagon for $350. Now the Council has refused to provide quarters for it at the police station, which is controlled by the city, and not the commissioners. It is held by some Aldermen that the patrol wagon, with a couple of horses, and possibly an extra man on the force, is not needed. The Police Commissioners threaten to provide quarters and charge the cost to the city.

PETERBOROUGH SATURDAY NOVEMBER 5 1910

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT AND IMPROVEMENT OF PETERBOROUGH--A CLEARLY DEFINED PLAN OF ACTION

The Examiner Suggests a Plan of Campaign of Some Things Which Might be Progressively Done with the Co-operation of the Interests Affected---Market Site and City Buildings Should be Sold and the Proceeds Applied to the Building of a New City Hall--Improvements that Might be Made to Central Park, the Little Lake Cemetery and Other Points in the City.

THE PROGRAMME COULD BE EASILY ACCOMPLISHED

Should Purchase the Agricultural Society Grounds and Assist the Exhibition--More Wharfage Accommodation and Other Improvements are Needed Along the Water Front.

AN OVERHEAD BRIDGE AT HUNTER STREET

The present market site and city buildings to be sold.

The money procured from this sale to be applied to purchasing a site for a new City Hall building, preferably to be situated on George street, facing the new armories and south of the new public library or on some other suitable site.

The Central Park to be beautified and made a green with a narrow cinder path—a lovers' lane as it were—with room for two to walk abreast.

An overhead bridge to be constructed over the Otonabee river at Hunter street to take care of passenger and street railway traffic. This will have to be done jointly on some equable basis.

The market to be established on the filled in ground owned by the city at the foot of Charlotte and west of the spur line.

A retaining wall to be built along the west bank at the Otonabee river from Hunter street to the C. P. R. bridge.

The C. P .R. bridge to be equipped with a swing and a foot bridge.

The government to expropriate Mr. G. W. Hatton's property and build a wharf from McDonel's point to connect with existing wharf at Spalding's bay.

The city to arrange on some fair basis the removal of the Matthews Company plant to a more suitable site and to use the site of the present packing house for wharf accomodation.

The Ontario Legislature and the Dominion Government and the City to cooperate to have this work carried out, the government to help when required wherever legitimate and proper assistance can be given, Peterborough citizens irrespective of politics to co-operate.

The dam that is to be built at the north end of the city to have street railway facilities provided to enable the people in the north end to have the desired accommodation.

The new dam that will have to be built at Nassau to be provided with a bridge.

A new street to be opened from Charlotte street northward to Hunter street, somewhere midway between Aylmer and George street.

The purchase of the Exhibition grounds by the Exhibition Society, the city to guarantee the bonds representing the purchase price.

The cemetery to be provided with a new entrance of a dignity in keeping with its purpose.

The above briefly express the views of the Examiner as to a certain policy that might be adopted for the building up a greater and a better Peterborough. It is not suggested that all these things should be attempted at once; such a course would not be feasible—but these are the main points of a scheme for the future that should meet with the consideration of the citizens of Peterborough. With some well defined platform such as has been suggested before the public to be carried out in a common sense, business-like way, with ample opportunity being given the people to express their views, the Examiner feels and has no hesitation in saying that something could be done to improve Peterborough and make the conditions much more pleasant for the citizens. All the improvements mentioned in the brief list given will have to come sooner or later; why should they not be placed before the public now and the public bodies begin to plan what must inevitably be carried out.

A policy, or programme, embodying the following proposals, and doubtless others that may suggest themselves, might well be adopted as a "Peterborough policy."—one to be worked up up to and worked out by degrees; a policy understood to be adopted by succeeding city councils, and advanced by them. It may require years to carry out a programme of city improvement, but such a programme anticipated and adopted, can, in carrying out one portion, be made to pave the way and make easier the means for the accompaniment of another step. The expenditure need not be necessarily great. On consideration it will be seen that the expense, which for any one enterprise, except, perhaps, the overhead bridge, will not be great, will be met by the conversion and utilization of property now owned by the city, or in other cases, be minimised by being shared by the Government, and the interests that stand to be benefitted.

A New City Hall is Needed.

In the first place, it is universally agreed among the citizens that Peterborough requires a city hall in keeping with the progress that distinguishes this city. The present building at the corner of Hunter and Water Streets—called by courtesy, The City Building—has long since outgrown its usefulness and neither its exterior nor its interior approaches the conditions that should exist in a city of Peerborough's size and advancement. The police station, the police court, the city clerk's office, the city treasurer's office, the engineer's quarters, the tax collector's bureau, the plumbing inspector, the medical health officer, the Industrial Commissioner, and the chief of Police are all crowded and jammed into the one small building with the result that the officials are handicapped in the discharge of their duties by lack of the necessary accommodation. No one will attempt to deny that Peterborough wants a new city hall; wants it badly and wants it at once. Naturally the question of financing the cost of a new hall of the size and nature suitable for the purpose comes to one's mind when the subject of new city buildings is suggested. From the view point of the citizens generally this is an important point to be taken into consideration.

To Solve the Cost Problem.

The Examiner believes that the problem could be met in a business-like way by the sale of the market site and the present city buildings. Students of civic economy have long pointed out that the land now used as a market is much too valuable to be tied up for such a purpose. It seems ridiculous that a large section of the ground in the very heart of the city should be allowed to lie idle and practically useless except for market purposes when this property could be disposed of at a very substantial figure and just as suitable and desirable a market site could be easily secured. Why should not this property, as well as the present city buildings, be sold and the revenue derived from this transaction be devoted to procuring a site for and erecting a new city hall?

The Most Desirable Site.

Then comes the question of the most desirable site, and the Examiner suggests that no location could be more suitable than on the east side of George Street, north of Murray Street, south of the new Public Library and facing Central Park and the new armouries and Collegiate Institute. This section of Peterborough should be the city's show place and will be if the city fathers adopt the proper methods. With the Central Park as the centre, containing the armouries and Collegiate Institute, the Y.M.C.A., and new Murray Street Baptist Church which will be erected, on Murray Street, the city hall and public library buildings on George Street, and the George Street Methodist Church at the corner of George and Murray Streets, there would be a splendid group of buildings, splendidly arranged, that would be a credit to the city and that citizens would take pride and delight in pointing out to their visitors. This is why the Examiner suggests a site on George Stret near the park—perhaps a more suitable site could be secured; if so, build the city hall there, but let us have it somewhere. The value of property is constantly increasing; if a site is to be secured it should be done as speedily as possible.

Beautify Central Park.

That something more should be done with Central Park than has been done is admitted. The park, surrounded as it is by the finest buildings in the city, should be Peterborough's beauty spot. At the present time this can hardly be said about it. The park should be made a green, a pleasant resting-place for the citizens and a scene of beauty to delight the eye, but above all not a thoroughfare. At present there are paths across it in different directions which detract greatly from its appearance. A cinder, or other path, something like those in Victoria Park might be laid for summer use, and otherwise efforts should be made to give the square an appearance befitting its location and surroundings. Thousands of people pass by every day; there are very few visitors who do not see Central Park, and it should be in keeping with the attention that it receives.

A New Market Site.

The disposal of the present market site would necessitate the securing of another home for the market, and naturally the filled in ground owned by the city at the foot of Charlotte Street suggests itself. Here is a piece of ground as central as the present market and yet much less valuable, which could be admirably adapted to market purposes. The city owns the property now, consequently there would be no outlay involved such as would be the case if a site had to be purchased. This land, which has been made by filling in the duck pond, could not be used for more suitable purposes than to provide market accommodation. Its location prevents it from coming into demand for store purposes, yet it is centrally situated and well adopted for the use suggested. The moving of the market to this property has been talked of more than once by members of the city council and seems to be the most reasonable and business-like way of securing a market site in the central part of the city, and yet not involving in its maintenance the tying up of a portion of most valuable land that might quite easily be adapted to other purposes.

Many merchants of George Street would welcome the opportunity of owning their own places of business. The removal of the market from its present location and the turning of the property into building sites would give these merchants the chance that they have been looking for as the property on Water Street and Charlotte Street would make ideal locatins for stores, that would undoubtedly be eagerly sought up if placed on sale. This would have the tendency to ease the situation on George Street and leave openings for other merchants there.

Overhead Bridge.

The idea of building an overhead bridge over the Otonabee River at Hunter Street to provide street railway and passenger accommodation is not a new one. It has been broached before and will undountedly have to be dealt with later. The details would have to be arranged on an equable basis by the interests affected beneficially, by the proposed bridge the city, the street railway company the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Quaker Oats Company. The nature of the ground at this point peculiarly adapts itself to the requirements of such a structure. Ward No. 5 wants a street car service, and an overhead bridge would solve the problem as well as do away with the dangerous level crossing at this point. Already there are four railway lines crossing Hunter Street just west of the bridge and there will probably be more in future, a condition that is by no means too safe. An overhead bridge would remove all danger to pedestrians in crossing the river at Hunter Street, while of course it would be indispensable for street railway purposes. The bridge would necessarily be wide enough to provide for street car accommodation and pedestrian and vehicular traffic. As to the expense of building such a structure it would have to be met upon some equable basis by the several interests affected by the carrying out of the scheme.

Along the Water Front.

The need for improvement along Peterborough's water front will be admitted by everyone. Even under present conditions with the Trent Canal uncompleted the wharfage facilities are hopelessly inadequate. The Wolfe Street wharf is not big enough now for the demands made upon it, and with the completion of the canal will not begin to meet the requirements of the river trade. More wharfage is needed, and needed at once, as every steamboat man has no hesitation in saying. During the past summer on frequent occasions, there were boats three deep along the wharf, a condition that should not be allowed to exist. With the completion of the canal, of course, this overcrowding will be correspondingly greater.

The solution of the problem would seem to be easy. The Government should expropriate the property owned by Mr. G. W. Hatton south of the Wolfe Street wharf and should build wharves and slips from the McDonald estate property to the present wharf. The city could facilitate this work by arranging upon fair terms the removal of the present plant of the Geo. Matthews Company to a site more suitable for the nature of the business carried on by the firm. The removal of these buildings would render the building of adequate wharf accommodation from the C. P. R. bridge to the McDonald property, a small matter, and this work will have to be carried out.

A Swing in C.P.R. Bridge.

The C. P. R. bridge will have to be provided with a swing in order to allow steamers and barges to navigate the river as far as the Quaker Oats Company's plant and other factories that may be erected north of the bridge. The completion of the canal will mean that the Quaker Oats Company will secure the greater part of its grain supply by water, and it will be necessary to make provision for tugs and barges to reach their plant. The Government has already provided for this by dredging a channel in the river from the C. P. R. bridge north, but, of course, the work would be useless if a means of passing through the bridge were not provided.

Although not as important from a manufacturer's standpoint, a foot-bridge across the C. P. R. bridge for the accommodation of pedestrians is badly needed, and should be attended to. Although many use the present railway bridge they do so in the face of trespass notices and of the danger of accident. Some safer means of crossing the river at this point is needed and would be gladly welcomed by the many hundreds of people who have to cross the river two or three times daily. The city should take the matter up with the Canadian Pacific Railway and see what can be done to carry out this much needed work.

A retaining wall along the west bank of the river is an improvement, the importance and desirability of which will be readily recognized. It should extend from the Hunter Street bridge to the C. P. R. bridge and would be a finishing touch to the work that has been done by the Dominion Government in dredging this section of the river and making it practicable for navigation purposes as far as Hunter Street.

Bridge Capable of Carrying Street Car Line via Auburn.

A new dam will have to be built at the north end of the city, and when this work is carried out care should be taken to see that it is provided with a proper bridge capable of looking after street car and pedestrian traffic. The people living in the north end of the East Ward require street car accommodation, and with a bridge at the north end and the proposed overhead bridge at Hunter Street, a belt-line passing through the East Ward and giving every section of it the desired accommodation could be easily arranged. Any movement that would result in this work being carried out would be eagerly supported by the people.

Not enough attention has been shown in the past to this most important question of bridges. The new water-works dam should have been provided with a footbridge; a vital mistake was made in neglecting to carry out this important work. However, there is a chance to remedy to some extent this mistake by building a footbridge over the dam which will have to be erected to replace the present structure at Nassau, which will soon have to be re-built.

Another Business Street.

Another proposal that can be advantageously, and with comparatively little difficulty, carried out, is the opening of a street from Charlotte street, parallel to and about midway between George and Aylmer streets, northward to Hunter street. This would have the advantage of providing another street in the business centre of the city. It is tentatively suggested that such new street might begin at a point east of the Snowden House on Charlotte street, and extend northward to Simcoe, and thence northward to Hunter street. The square extending between Aylmer and George streets is unconvenently large from east to west, a condition that involves a good deal of waste ground that might very advantageously be applied to business purposes, by the opening of the street suggested and very sensibly increase the value of the property through which the street would pass. This increased value would be sufficient to very largely, if not entirely, compensate the value of the land required for the street, and the owners might find it advantageous in the sense of profit, to give the land required for the street. In addition, it might be well to consider the idea of opening a street in continuation of Chambers street, northward to Murray street, opposite to Central Park.

Buy the Exhibition Grounds.

The city and citizens, especially the business men, do not seem to appreciate the advantages to be derived from making Peterborough an agricultural centre, in addition to its being the best farmers' market in the province. No place in Ontario is better adapted by natural conditions—situation, ease of access and surrounding country to having the best agricultural exhibition and all that, that, in its modern sense, implies, than is Peterborough. The first step, naturally, is to have suitable grounds, owned by the Society, a circumstance that would warrant them in making the necessary permanent improvements that would equip the grounds for all possible exhibition purposes. The advantages of this will not be disputed. Steps should promptly be taken to enlist and organize the several interests that would certainly benefit from the annual presence in Peterborough of a first-class 3 or 4 days' exhibition, such as the Peterborough Industrial can be made. The Society is anxious to purchase the present grounds, on which they have an option with only one year's tenure. Now, when the society is in the mood to buy, and is desirous of erecting new buildings immediately, is the time to close the deal. The purchase may be very easily financed by the city guaranteeing the bonds of the society. If the society, by the erection of good, permanent buildings, increased to that extent, the value of the property, which is every day growing in value by city extension in that direction—even if it failed to meet its bonds, would leave the city in possession of a property with a value much in excess of the price for which the property can now be purchased. In case of the failure of the society throwing the property on the city's hands, and in the further event of the city not desiring to hold the property, many private individuals would be found to assume the property at a figure that would relieve the city, if not yield a profit.

Make a Worthy Cemetery Entrance.

The directorate of the Little Lake Cemetery Company deserve credit for having placed the grounds in a beautiful condition, creditable to the city and in keeping with the object of the place, but the approaches to the cemetery are not in keeping with the grounds to which they give access. The present gates are not of a style, nor dignity, to correspond with the importance and beauty of the sacred enclosure they guard. A handsome and appropriate entrance should be provided, such as the finances of the company will warrant without interfering with any ordinary demand. At the prices at which plots are sold, ample means should be available to provide a becoming and worthy entrance to one of the, otherwise, most beautiful cemeteries in the country.

Further Improve the Approach.

The crib-work thanking the present drive approach to the cemetery is showing signs of decay, and will have to be replaced before many years. Why not look forward to widening the drive so as to make it doubly beautiful? If a concrete crib wall were placed outside, parallel with the present one, twenty-five, or thirty, or more, feet in the lake, the space could be easily filled in to near the top with dredgings from the lake, a driveway constructed thereon, and another row of elms planted, so as to provide a double drive, with possibly a walk for pedestrians between them.

These are some suggestions for Peterborough's advancement that the Examiner believes should be adopted as part of a policy that might well be taken up by the civic bodies. With the co-operation of the citizens of Peterborough, irrespective of political differences and working wholly and solely for the welfare of the city in which they are living, a great deal could be accomplished towards making these plans actualities instead of possibilities. Some well-defined policy should be decided upon, and the Examiner is of the opinion that those that have been mentioned in this necessarily brief resume are worthy of earnest consideration. Other people may have better plans for what is necessary for Peterborough's up-building; if so, the Examiner would be glad to hear them.

DR. CRIPPEN MUST FACE THE GALLOWS ON TUESDAY NEXT

Court of Appeal Refuses to Grant New Trial and All Hope is Gone Unless Home Secretary Interferes,

THE GIRL COLLAPSES

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 5.—Pale and trembling, as if in the shadows of next Tuesday's gallows already were upon him, Dr. Hawley H. Crippen was brought into the court of appeal this morning to hear his lawyer's arguments before the court of appeal as to why he should not be hanged. The lower court had refused to permit Crippen's presence, but the appeal court ordered it. Lawyer Tobin's first plea that jurors had not been properly isolated during the trial was immediately overruled by the court. The debonaire doctor must die on the gallows next Tuesday for the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore. His last hope in courts was rudely dissipated this morning, when the court of appeal decided that the case was well and truly tried, and that the sentence of death was just and equitable and quite according to the laws of England. Crippen received the verdict of Justices Channell, Pickford and Channing without a twitch. His face was even paler and more deathly than the pallor which confinement in prison had made it, and he trembled like an aspen leaf, however, when he was led out to the cell between crowds of curious ones, there to remain till Tuesday, when he will brought to the gallows, unless the Home Secretary interferes, which is considered unlikely.

Tobin, M.P., his lawyer, fought to the last ditch for the condemned man, but his arguments about the isolation of the jury, the chance of mistaken identification of the remains and so on, all proved of no avail. Tobin will now go personally to the British Cabinet and ask for a commitation to life imprisonment or a pardon. He will not admit that all hope is gone. The verdict was communicated to Miss Le-neve who collapsed.

PROMENADE AND CONCERT WERE GREAT SUCCESS

Most Enjoyable Evening Under the Auspices of the Collegiate Girls' Athletic Association.

A FINE PROGRAMME

Speaking of enjoyable evenings, what's the matter with last night's concert and promenade at the Collegiate Institute? It was alright. A characteristic of the Collegiate pupils, is the interest and vim which they put into any entertainments they get up, and last night's concert evidenced this fact. It was a complete success from start to finish, and each number which went to make up the excellent and high class programme, was carried out to perfection. Each item was perfect in itself and much credit is due the members of the executive of the Girls' Athletic Association, under whose auspices the concert was held, for the splendid arrangements, and they are to be congratulated upon the success which attended these arrangements. The programme was as follows:

Piano Solo—Miss Giroux.

Pumpkin Drill. This was performed by eight girls and the splendid manner in which it was done is worthy of special mention. The eight young ladies walked up in line with pumpkins on their heads, hallowed out, and curved to represent the face of a human being, with a lighted candle inside. A white gown covered the figure so that no faces, except that imitated by the pumpkins, were visible. All these movements were greeted with laughter and applause from the audience.

This was followed by a pleasing vocal solo by Miss Billington.

Reading—Miss Leary.

"Three Maids of Lee". This was also well performed. The young ladies were: Miss Kathleen O'Brien, Miss Mabel Patterson and Miss Olive Myers and Mr. Ferguson, of the Collegiate teaching staff, sang the accompaniment.

This was followed by an instrumental duet by Misses Gumpricht and Graves.

Last, but certainly not least, was a performance named "Pantomime," in which Mrs. Pettit and six girls took part. Mrs. Pettit recited the accompaniment and the six young ladies went through the performance in a very capable and excellent manner. The young ladies are as follows: Miss Nelson, Miss Alice Logan, Miss Elsie Mowat, Miss Marion Pyncheon, Miss Madeline Rutherford and Miss Mary Nesbitt.

At the close of the programme, the promenade was held, and luncheon was served in the laboratory. The following ladies acted as patronesses: Mrs. Fessenden, Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Crane Mrs. Morrison and Mrs. Pettit. The promenade was taken part in with most enjoyable results. The Normal was well represented. A large number of students were present and the old rhyme which was given a prominent place in the "Collegiate Echoes" to the effect that the Normalites were "horribly formal" was put to shame, for they took part in the enjoyments with a will and ceremonies were put aside.

To give all who took part in the programme and other parts of the entertainment, the credit due to them, it would require columns of space, and therefore to say that each and everyone of the entertainers did admirably well, is the least that can be said. Any person who wishes to enjoy a first class entertainment and a good time should not miss the next concert at the Collegiate Institute.

INASMUCH.

In another place in this issue is found an article, supplied by the Secretary of the local Children's Aid Society, Mr. J. E. L. Goodwill. It is one of a series to be printed in the Examiner, showing the origin, aims, objects and results of the Children's Aid Society. It is hardly necessary to define the character of the society's work. Everybody knows that it is one that constitutes an appeal to the most pathetic side of human nature, sympathy for ill-treated, suffering, neglected, helpless, dependent childhood, subjected to conditions that tend to and determine its entrance into a life of vice and crime and misery. It appeals to all classes for all classes in the community in general are affected by the conditions it aims to ameliorate; it knows no creed, except the broad divine creed of Love, the creed of Him that said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." It appeals to mothers, for the children of mothers are suffering and neglected; it appeals to fathers in the same way and to brothers and sisters. It appeals to everybody with a heart to feel and a hand to help.

Read the article carefully and do not forget the tag-day, explained in another column, to be conducted under the auspices of the society on Saturday next. This will give an opportunity to all to give — little or much as the Lord has prospered. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my little ones, ye have done it unto Me."

A FAIR DEAL FOR CANADA.

The question of reciprocal trade relations with the United States is brought into prominence by the arrival in Ottawa of the United States commissioners to engage in preliminary negotiations. Of course this is a question that naturally arouses great interest, and it seems important, that nothing should be done to embarass the Canadian government in the pending negotiations. The government is charged with the responsibility incident to the situation, and no doubt they are as well prepared as they are anxious to safeguard Canadian interests. The case is in a sense subjudice and needless comment in prejudice of the points at issue is as little indicated as would be similar comments in a case before the courts. It is the part of good citizenship to assist the government in protecting Canadian interests, but it is questionable whether newspapers are the best medium of assistance in delicate matters like international negotiations. The views of the several interests concerned or likely to be interested in reciprocity, might well be laid before the Canadian commissioners, for their sole benefit, rather than have them by undue and premature publicity, serve as an "examination for discovery" to the United States representatives, and give them an opportunity in advance to prepare arguments combatting the Canadian position. It would be gratuitous generosity in a government to give an opposition an advance copy of its policy, as comprised in its sessional legislative programme, so that it might thus more expeditiously and effectively be pulled to pieces.

It is to be assumed as certain that Canada's position on reciprocity will be made such as will protect Canadian interests. We are not so anxious for reciprocity as to sacrifice any principle to obtain it. After the abolition of the treaty of 1854 which was admitted to have been advantageous to this country, Canada was, for some time, anxious for reciprocity, and made overtures for opening negotiations. These overtures were coldly received, our neighbours feeling that their indifference might help to drive this country into annexation. But Canada survived intact, and when fifteen years ago Sir Wilfrid made overtures for negotiations that were ignored, he declared that Canada was done with offers—if any were made, they must come from the United States. Then Canada did what was to be expected of the enterprise and patriotism of the government. She closened her trade relations with the Mother country and by virtue of the new outlet for her commerce thus created and otherwise, became to feel comparatively independent of the United States market. The result was that the United States came to Canada, seeking a conference on reciprocity. Canada, could not, out of international courtesy, decline, nor ignore, the possibility of securing better trade relations with our geographically natural market. Instead of Canada going to the United States, the latter has come to Canada, the United States commissioners are in Ottawa, and negotiations are pending. If Canada can succeed in securing some trade arrangement in respect of a few articles or many articles, distinctly advantageous to the country, it would be a good thing. It is certain that the Canadian commissioners, Messrs. Fielding and Paterson, will keep an open eye to the interests of Canada. It is for them to consider what articles, if any, the produce of Canada, can be subjected to reciprocal free exchange; and in any event, the Canadian commissioners will appreciate Canadian sentiment, even if a sense of duty and patriotism did not restrain them, so keenly as not to conclude any arrangement in the way of reciprocity, that is not, and will not, be directly to the benefit of Canada and Canadian interests of every kind, including the integrity of our present trade relations with the Mother country. A further safeguard, is implied in the fact that any treaty that may be recommended will have to be subjected to public scrutiny and the judgment of the people through parliament, in the process of ratification or rejection. Canada is not particularly pining for, nor suffering from, the want of, reciprocity; but that does not preclude a courteous consideration of United States overtures; nor the conclusion of a treaty that will be distinctly advantageous to this country.

SPEAK RIGHT AND FEAR NOT.

The Toronto Star, in a recent issue, prints the following article, under the heading, "Usage not a Safe Guide":

The Windsor Record finds it unnatural to say "It is I," and suggests that "me" will yet be "elevated to the rank of nominative case," and this "dangerous snare" removed. It points out that often some unfortunate, in his anxiety to avoid one error, falls into a worse and says "between you and I." While the Record is on this subject it should turn its attention to the relative pronoun "who." This member of the Logos family is continually getting people into trouble. Newspapers, for instance, have annually to grapple with the grammatical construction of a brief heading for their municipal slate. It generally ends up this way: "Who to Vote For."

The "who" should, of course, be "whom," but there is something about the phrase when thus written which makes it clumsy and unnatural. As prepositions should not appear at the end of sentences, the strictly proper form is "For whom to vote," which is still more unwieldy. To change the construction altogether and say "How to Vote" results in an expression which is open to attack on the ground of an altered meaning, but it is perhaps the best solution.

The Record, however, is not upon safe ground if it is really in earnest in contending that some grammatical errors should be sanctioned because the correct form seems unnatural and because the error is sanctioned by usage. Such a doctrine leads inevitably to grammatical chaos. A tendency to bow too readily to usage has been shown by not a few United States dictionaries, but British publications have generally avoided this pitfall. Usage, especially when local, is a frail reed to lean upon; the dialect of Yorkshire could hardly be accepted as "correct English."

The word most generally sinned against in Canada is the verb to lie. In conversation and in the press it is continually misused. People who would shudder at "I seen" will calmly declare that "I had down to rest." This grammatical heresy is so prevalent as almost to justify special emphasis in the public schools upon the conjugation of the intransitive verbs lie (prevaricate), lie (recline), and the transitive verb lay (deposit).

Both the Record and the Star are both right and wrong. Usage, in the case of language forms is a right guide when it is the usage of competent, recognized literary authority, but usage is a blind and blundering guide in respect of the uneducated, the uncultured, or the careless. The corruption of language, the pollution of the well of English undefiled, is due to the deference to unauthorized usage. People, either private persons or newspaper writers, who certainly cannot claim to pose as model-setting literary authorities, become a law unto themselves in face of the usage of the recognized guild of literary dominants. Hence we have corrupted forms of spelling not sanctioned or adopted by "the Academy." We have the "u" eliminated from such words as honour, labour, etc., we have "centre" spelled "center," we have the hideous contracted form of "thru" for "through," we have the illogical United States mode of not doubling the final consonant in adding "ed" to form the past tense, so that kidnapped becomes "kidnaped," slapped becomes "slaped," and rapped becomes "raped". We have even papers like the Star and Globe adopting the clipt form, "program" without the sanction of usage of the highest literary authority; and it is not surprising that the stadler fry feel justified in bedevelling the English language at will. The English language, like the British constitution and British law, is modified by precedent. A judge on the bench may establish a precedent, but that does not qualify or permit any pettifogget who may feel so inclined, to set up a precedent that will command respect and adoption.

In regard to the Record "finding it unnatural" to hear said "It is I" it is shown how perverted usuage corrupts the ear. If the Record writer had read the Holy Gospels as much as he might have done he would have read of the Master saying "It is I; be not afraid"; and his ear would not be shocked at the use by an educated man or woman of the expression "It is I". When we hear the conversation of people who claim to be, and are, educated—in the grammatical sense—if not cultured, it is no surprise that correctly spoken English seems unnatural. We have such persons continually murdering the King's English, when they know, if they would think, that they are doing wrong. In adopting such forms of speech they show a slovenliness, which, if applied to their dress, would transform them into "scarecrows". They are not regarded as persons of culture, they do not serve as an example to the uneducated to improve their speech. The fact is we talk too much, we talk too carelessly, so that in regard to the correct, cultured speaking of the English language, either in pronunciation or grammatical form, the time and money spent on our education is wasted, and we become guilty of contributing to the sensation of the correct use of the English language sounding "unnatural." No man or woman of culture should be ashamed or feel it "unnatural" to speak the English language correctly, any more than they should feel "unnatural" in doing the right thing.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Will Mr. Borden help Mr. Bourassa "finish his work"? asks the Toronto Star. Or will he realize that the by-election result is an endorsation of Mr. Monk's claims to the leadership of the Federal Opposition?

The proposal that the fees of doctors be increased may be something in the form of killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. The present popular tendency to fly to the use of quack medicines stands to be intensified.

A PROBLEM FOR ALL.

(Toronto Star)

There is an ill-concealed note of triumph in Conservative comments on the Bourassa victory in Drummond and Arthabaska. But Mr. Borden must view the result with some misgiving. He, as well as Sir Wilfrid Laurier, must deal with Bourassa and Nationalism, and all that they represent. He must work with them or against them, or he must strive to win them over to some form of Imperialism, which will be acceptable in other parts of Canada.

Does anyone suppose that Mr. Borden will be more successful in winning Quebec over to Imperial ideas than Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been? His difficulties will be greater, not less. He has no Cartier by his side. He has not in Quebec a single follower of eminence or power, who can do the unifying work of Cartier or Laurier. A period of difficulty lies not only before these party leaders, but before all who are concerned in the problem of building up a united Canada within the Empire.

INVESTITURE OF THE PRINCE OF WALES IN CARNARVON CASTLE

Tradition says that the first Prince of Wales was carried out into the courtyard of Carnarvon Castle in the arms of his father, Edward I., and presented to the assembled chiefs with these words:—

"Here I give you a Prince of Wales, who was born in Wales, and who can speak no English."

From that day to this there has been no Prince of Wales created in the little principality, but next July King George's eldest son will be invested with his title in the old courtyard of Carnarvon Castle, with all the solemn and touching ceremonies peculiar to the occasion. It is said that the coronation of the King himself will not provide a more magnificent spectacle.

A Welsh Revival.

The author of the idea is Capt. Owen Baughan, who made a literary reputation several years ago, under the title Owen Rhoscomyl. The captain is a passionate Celt, and his object is so strenuously urging the Welsh ceremonial is twofold. In the first place, he wishes the British people generally to realize the fact that the Prince of Wales is actually Prince of Wales and that the title is not merely complimentary. His other motive is to inspire outside interest in the principality, and thereby assist in its industrial and commercial revival. With the latter idea in mind, Capt. Baughan had desired to have the investiture take place in Cardiff, but historical precedent decided against him, historical precedent being an alias for David Lloyd-George, Chancelor of the Exchequer, and arbiter of Welsh affairs.

The Last Prince and the First.

Llewelyn, the Last, was in truth the last native Prince of Wales, and seemed to be making a winning fight to retain his rank and title when his betrayal and death in 1282 left the cause of Welsh independence in the weaker hands of his brother David. It was not long before David was taken by Edward I. of England, who then decided to make his son Prince of Wales, in the hope of somehow placating the savage Welsh chieftains, who, though conquered, were a constant source of worry and danger to him. The Prince was born in Wales, as Edward said, was fostered by a Welsh chief and his wife and baptized by a Welsh bishop. All through his life he retained his love for the Welsh people, and was never without Welshmen in his train.

Wales' Great Prince.

Capt. Baughan calls attention to the fact which became general knowledge only after the death of Queen Victoria, namely, that the eldest son of the King of England does not of necessity inherit the title of Prince of Wales. It will be remembered that for several months after he became Heir-Apparent the present King retained his title of Duke of Cornwall and York, and only became known as the Prince of Wales after his father had thus created him. The formal investiture of the first Prince of Wales occurred at Lincoln, while that of the Black Prince took place at Westminster. The greatest of all the Princes of Wales was born in Wales. This was Henry of Monmouth, the victor of Agincourt, and it was no idle boast that Shakespeare made him utter—"I, too, am Welsh good countryman." Henry of Monmouth had double right to his title, for he maintained it on the field of battle against Owen Glendower, who had been proclaimed native Prince of Wales at Corwen.

The Tudor Line.

We are informed by Capt. Baughan that in Wales it is never forgotten that King George V. is King by virtue of his descent from Harry Tudor, the Welsh-speaking Welsh chieftain who led a Welsh army into the heart of England and there fulfilled the old prophecies by defeating and killing one of the finest fighters who ever wore the English crown. From Bosworth down to our own day all titles derive from the sword of Henry Tudor, the only man ever crowned King of England on the field of battle. Since the act of union between England and Wales in 1535, the allegiance of the Welsh people is to the King, their good-will to the Prince. The ceremony of investiture will illustrate the sturdy, independent, affectionate spirit of the Welsh people, for at Carnrvon there will be no swearing os vassalage, but of foster kinship, and with all Celts this tie is more binding than mere blood kinship.

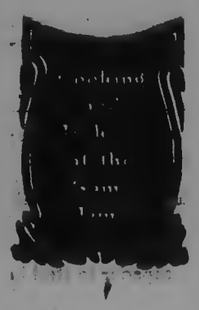
PANDORA RANGE

for Coal or Wood



BRAINY stove experts designed the Pandora Range. They introduced a new system of flue construction so that the draft for cooking would also be the draft for baking. With the Pandora you can have the kettles boiling over every pot hole at the same time the oven is baking pies and roasting beef.

Just think of the time that this perfect system of flue construction will save for you when you're hurrying to get a big dinner ready. Just think how much fuel the Pandora will save for you by doing the baking and cooking at the same time. And remember, no other range has this perfect system of flue-construction. Send for the Pandora booklet. It tells of other conveniences designed by our brainy stove experts.

Ignorance is the curse of God. Henry VI., Part II., Act IV., Sc. 7.

Ignorance is the curse of God! There are no limitations to this expression. It is not one of the curses. It is the curse; the evil from which all other evils spring. At first sight this might seem somewhat extreme, but a little reflection will show that Shakespeare was right. A glance back over history will prove this. The nations steeped in ignorance have been the most brutal and barbarous. Where illiteracy prevailed . . and disease found excellent breeding grounds.

During the long period from the fifth to the fifteenth century Europe was intellectually in Stygian darkness; the little learning there was, was hidden in castles and monasteries. The Dark Ages is the name fittingly given to that period of ignorance. Cruelty was a common practice and superstition prevailed. It was not until the literature of the Greeks and the Romans, the explorations of the daring navigators of Spain and France and England had made the world, ancient and modern, known to mankind, that the darkness was, in a degree, dispelled.

What does the Renaissance mean? A new birth! A birth to light and life. Man in the fifteenth century was born again. Science and art and literature worked together to dispel the darkness that brooded over the earth. Shakespeare had no doubt about the nature of ignorance. There was "the darkness but ignorance"; ignorance was "gross and miserable"; it was "the common curse of mankind." He was enormously in advance of his age. Writing at the end of the sixteenth century and early in the seventeenth, he had apparently completely broken away from the superstitions of his time. With a seer's insight he saw into the heart of things, and on every great question spoke as profoundly as does the most advanced thinker in the twentieth century. It would be impossible to mention any question of vital importance to the individual and the state on which he has not uttered words of wisdom. He was a veritable lightbearer, a dispeller of darkness, showing kings and peasants, the rich and the poor their duty.

Where ignorance is there is the curse of God. Illiterate Turkey is unspeakable Turkey; ignorant Africa is darkest Africa. Nations that remain illiterate drop behind in the race. Unless the mind is fed with healthy food the whole being becomes degenerate. A man may live frugally and grow strong, but if he starve his mind he becomes a sluggard, a butterfly, a brute. Such beings are mere cumberers of the ground. They are either cast into outer darkness, or become mere hewers of wood and drawers of water for those who have been careful to cultivate their minds and keep abreast of the learning and wisdom of the ages.

The Anglo-Saxon has attained the highest degree of civilization. England and her colonies have been in the van in the battle against "gross and miserable ignorance. The United States stands at the highest point of civilization. It is true that in England and Europe there are many minds who are pre-eminent in philosophy, science and art, but in the United States every man has equal opportunity. Learning is general; ignorance there is, but it is the exception. Superstition exists, but it is in the outlying corners where ignorance is still making a stand. What knowledge can do is better illustrated in the United States and Canada than in any other countries. The enslaved and superstitious inhabitants of Europe come to America. They are seeking a new material world; they find a new spiritual world. The Pole, the Armenian, the Turk, the Russian, the Italian, is not long in discarding his old idols. Oppression has kept ..... in crass ignorance. Freedom, a sense of equality with other men, lifts him to a higher plane. The shackles of ignorance drop from his wrists, the light of knowledge beams from his eyes. In the second generation it is hard to distinguish the American of European extraction from those of native-born parents. Education is a great leveller.

It is only of recent years that knowledge has been able successfully to storm the forts of ignorance. It was not until the astronomer's glass explored the heavens, the geologist's hammer wrested earth's secrets from her, that the world and the universe were truly known. Both had been objects of dark superstition. The scientist turned his attention to the close study of plants and animals. Physical knowledge led to a higher spiritual knowledge. A God of fear became a God of love. The great forces of the world were studied and harnessed and knowledge turned the desolate places of earth to flowering gardens.

There is still much to be done. Ignorance is at work among nations building battleships and raising tariff walls. Ignorance is at work everywhere. Strikes and lockouts, tyrannous capitalists and destructive mobs are equally the outcome of ignorance. Hasten the time when arbitration between nations and men will be the rule, when the ignorance that makes for loss will give way to a knowledge and wisdom that makes for gain!

GENERALLY SPEAKING

There are many and strange ways in which human beings strive to gain an honest living and perhaps one of the strangest is the occupation of a woman in London (England), who makes a competency by selling Greenwich time to watchmakers. To quote from the London Graphic:

"Probably no hill in the world has had so strangely varied a history or played so important a part in the affairs of men as that at Greenwich. The granite line across the foot-path on its summit is the meridian from which the longitude on every British map and chart is calculated. All England sets its time by the mean solar-clock. There is a large galvano-magnetic clock fixed on the outside wall of the observatory and divided into twenty-four hours. There are still many who believe this clock is kept going by the sun. They do not know that the fixed stars are the real timekeepers from which Britishers check their daily progress. To this galvano-magnetic clock in the wall comes every Monday a woman who makes $2,500 a year out of the queerest occupation in England. She sells the time to London watchmakers. Her name is Miss Belleville, of Maidenhead. Eighty years ago, the then astronomer royal suggested to her father that if he took the corrected time of a certified chronometer every week, he could, no doubt, find numerous clients. So he bought a watch, made for the Duke of Essex, and then worked up a business with it. When he died, his widow sold the time till she reached the age of eighty-one, and then she handed the business over to her daughter. When Miss Belleville visits Greenwich at the beginning of every week, her chronometer is corrected, and she is given an official certificate. From that her fifty customers correct their watches and clocks."

From Scotland.

The following comes from Scotland: A certain Bishop, before he became known to fame, was minister of a remote parish in Perthshire, and was not considered a particularly attractive preacher. At his suggestion alterations in the transept of his church were made which did away with a large number of seats. After the alterations had been finished he met the beadle in the church.

"What do you think of the improvements, John?" he said.

"Improvements!" exclaimed John, in disdain; "they're no improvements at a'. Whaur are ye goin' to put the folk?"

"Oh," was the reply, "we have abundance of room, John, considering the size of the congregation."

"That's a' very weel the noo," retorted the beadle; "but what will we do when we get a popular meenister?"

The two following pieces are so exquisite in their simple language and beauty of thought that they are published for the benefit of such Examiner readers as are fond of lyrical poetry. They are from the pen of an English writer, George Barlow, and appear in a volume lately published which has won great praise entitled: "The Pageant of Life".

BLUE-BELLS

"One day, one day, I'll climb that distant hill
And pick the blue-bells there!"
So dreamed the child who lived beside the rill
And breathed the lowland air.
"One day, one day, when I am old I'll go
And climb the mountain where the blue-bells blow!"

One day! One day! The child was now a maid
A girl with laughing look;
She and her lover sought the valley-glade
Where sang the silver brook.
"One day," she said, "love, you and I will go
And reach that far hill where the blue-bells blow!"

Years passed. A woman now with wearier eyes
Gazed towards that sunlit hill.
Tall children clustered round her.
How time flies!
The blue-bells blossomed still.
She'll never gather them! All dreams fade so.
We live and die, and still the blue-bells blow.

THE DEAD CHILD

But yesterday she played with childish things,
With toys and painted fruit.
To-day she may be speeding on bright wings
Beyond the stars! We ask. The stars are mute.

But yesterday her doll was all in all;
She laughed and was content.
To-day she will not answer if we call,
She dropped no toys to show the road she went.

But yesterday she smiled and ranged with art
Her playthings on the bed.
To-day and yesterday are leagues apart;
She will not smile to-day, for she is dead.

Just Honest Enough.

Bankers everywhere gain a greater insight into the characters of men than is probably granted to men of any other profession, with the possible exception of lawyers. At their wickets every day are to be seen the rich and the poor, the sick and the sorrowful, the cheerful and the surly, the generous and the stingy. It is doubtful, however, if many amongst them come across such a a customer as did a certain cashier attending to the wants of a bucolic withdrawer of money. "I don't think this money's right," said the man to the cashier.

The Cashier — "Would you mind counting it again, sir? I think you'll find it correct."

The customer (having done so)—"Yes, it's right, but you be careful, young man, it's only just right!"

The Humane Society.

From all that can be gathered it appears to be about time that a branch of the Humane Society was established in Peterborough. Tales of cruelty to horses have come to hand recently that prove beyond question that certain teamsters and owners of drays should have a watch placed on their actions.

One employer of labour is said to possess horses that he works to such an extent that they have almost to be lifted to their feet in the morning.

If people only realized the fact, patent to any sensible man that overworking a horse is not only wrong from a physical aspect, but foolish from a fiscal one, there would surely be more mercy allotted to one of the noblest of earth's quadrupeds.

ST. LUKES A.Y.P.A.

Enjoyable Lecture By Rev. J. Bennett Anderson Last Night

Last night a large number were present at St. Luke's A.Y.P.A. meeting. Mr. Harry Moore, the indefatigable president, was in the chair, and with him on the platform were the rector, and Rev. J. B. Anderson. After devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, business was transacted and arrangements made for the visit of the members of the A.Y.P.A. to Springville next Thursday.

Several new members were enrolled, among them being Rev. J. B. Anderson, whose nomination was accepted with hearty approval.

Mr. Anderson gave a stirring lecture which was greatly enjoyed. Mrs. T. Moore acted as accompanist.

SALVATION ARMY CAMPS

For Mothers and Children

Hundreds of tired mothers and sickly children were given fresh air and rest during the past summer by the Salvation Army at its fresh air camps.

There are many tired mothers who have sickly children who were not fortunate enough to be given such an outing and we ask those mothers as a duty to themselves and their children to read the two following letters:

Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, who has done so much good among the children of New York City, says: "Little children seem to delight in taking Vinol. In my work among the destitute sick, I give Vinol in many cases where it would be impossible to give cod liver oil in any other form on account of the extreme weakness of the patient's stomach. I have known Vinol to restore appetite and infuse new life in many cases of sick women and children when everything else failed."

Mrs. C. W. Stump, Canton, Ohio, says: "I wish I could induce every mother who has a weak, sickly child to try the delicious cod liver preparation, Vinol, as it restored health and strength to our daughter after all else had failed."

Vinol is a boon to weak mothers and sickly children. If it fails to give satisfaction we will refund your money. McDermid & Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's Drug Store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE YANKEE GIRL.

Blanche Ring has ceased to be only a name to Peterborough theatregoers, and has instead become a memory of a most delightful evening's entertainment. The famous queen of musical comedy appeared at the Grand last night in "The Yankee Girl," and won instantaneous favour from one of the largest audiences of the season. Her clever singing and pleasing comedy methods combined with her attractive personality and winning smile make an irresistible claim upon the affection of her audience, who enjoyed every moment of her work. Miss Ring is different from other metropolitan favourites Peterborough has seen inasmuch as she does not allow the fact that she is playing in a one-night stand to prejudice her performance and strives as hard to entertain as if she was facing the most critical Broadway audience. She jollies everyone from the trap drummer in the orchestra to the man behind the spot-light, and has a way of taking her audience into her confidence that makes her a prime favourite.

"The Yankee Girl" gives her an opportunity to sing some of her new song-hits, "Louisiana Elizabeth," "Norah Malone," etc., and as encores she sings "Rings on My Fingers" and "Yip-I-Addy-I-Ay," the now favourite numbers that she has made famous. The older songs were sung in a manner that set the boys in the gallery whistling with a vim that made Miss Ring remark, "Some of you must have Victor records."

Although the lion's share of the merit of the production is captured by Miss Ring, the other principals were worthy supporters of the star and the company was well-balanced. Mr. Gilfoil has frequent opportunities to display his wonderful ability as a mimic and imitates everything from a phonograph selection to a cat-fight, being responsible for a good share of the laughter. Mr. Wm. P. Carleton wins favour in his dashing march song, "The Yankee Girl," and duplicates his success in this number by his song of "Love Among the Roses" in duet with Miss Ring. Miss Juliette Lange makes the best of her opportunity in the one number that falls to her "In Seville."

The plot of "The Yankee Girl" is not Ibsen-like enough to cause brain fever. It deals with the attempts of a Japanese agent, Oyama, to conspire with the President of the mythical South American Republic of Brilliantina to steal from an American company the rights to some valuable nitrate mines. Jessie Gordon, the Yankee Girl, is able to save the situation for her father and his associates.

"The Yankee Girl" is beautifully staged and costumed, and the chorus is clever, sing well and have looks away above the average. There are no chorus men, an innovation in a musical comedy.

Wm. Lorraine, the musical director, of "The Yankee Girl" wrote the charming music of "Peggy From Paris," the musical comedy that scored such a tremendous hit here four or five seasons ago. Under his skilful direction the music of the orchestra was one of the delightful features of the production and the Grand Opera House musicians are to be congratulated upon the manner in which they handled the music.

Caught a Heavy Cold.

It Left Him with a Hacking Cough.

Mr. J. H. Richards, 1852 Second Ave. East, Vancouver, B.C., writes:—"Allow me to write a few lines in praise of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Last fall I contracted a heavy cold which left me with a hacking cough, and every time I would get a little more cold this hacking cough would become a lung splitting one. It kept on getting worse and I kept on spending money buying different cough remedies until a friend asked me if I had ever tried Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I told him I was willing to try anything I thought would cure, and on the same day bought two bottles. Before half the first one was used my cough began to get much easier, and by the time I had used a bottle and a half my cough was gone. I am keeping the other half bottle in case it should come again but I am quite sure I have a positive cure. Let me recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to all who suffer from a cough or throat irritation of any kind."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

TOWN COUNCIL OF LINDSAY HAVING MUCH TO DO

The town of Lindsay, or rather the Municipal Council of that Corporation, has been experiencing considerable hard work during the past few weeks. Not only has the town's celebrated ozone plant been pronounced to a great extent a failure by two Provincial specialists, but the town clerk and treasurer, it would appear, has gotten away behind in his accounts. Mayor Begg has been a very busy man, and has succeeded in reducing the liability of the former treasurer from $17,989.00 to $4,489.00. The affair has, therefore, turned out much more satisfactory to the town than was at first anticipated. The liability was reduced by the friends of the late treasurer coming to their fellow townsman's aid.

The extraordinary part of the affair appears to be as to how this official could get behind to the extent of $17,989.00. Lindsay had a town auditor, who drew a yearly salary, for the purpose of auditing the town's accounts, and notwithstanding this fact, it is found that there is a large shortage, stretching over two and three years of the town's business. The special auditor appointed to report upon the treasurer's accounts, after irregularities were found, reported as follows.

Net balance to be accounted for on 1908 Roll, including proceeds of unauthorized sale of deb.	$ 1,202.43
Net balance to be accounted for on 1909 Roll	7,002.27
Net balance to be accounted for in 1910 Roll	8,809.09
Shortage in cash when auditor counted same on October 18th, 1910	218.09
Taxes of Canadian Pacific Railway Co., omitted from 1907 Tax Collector's Roll	757.75
Total	$ 17,989.63

In view of the above statement from the town's special auditor, it is inconceivable how an audit with any degree of thoroughness could have taken place during the years above mentioned.

The fact of the matter is, that too frequently the annual audit of the accounts of municipalities, is not as thorough as it might be, and the municipalities do not realize this until it is too late.

THOSE WHO SEEK SLIMNESS

Overfat men and women, mortified and humiliated by the publicity of conspicuous rolls and billows of fat are gradually learning that through the discovery of an eminent physician the burden of overfatness is taken from them, leaving the figure attractively proportioned, the flesh firm, the skin smooth, and the general health vastly improved, without dieting, exercise, or resulting wrinkles or flabbiness. There is no equal and no substitute for the famous Marmola Prescription, but there is a new and more convenient form—a tablet form of this safe fat remover. Marmola Prescription Tablets contain the same harmless, effective ingredients as the original prescription that has enabled so many thousands of uncomfortable men and women to reduce their weight evenly and steadily at the rate of a pound or more a day. An exceptionally large case of these Marmola Tablets is sold by all druggists at 75c. or sent you direct by the Marmola Co., 833 Monroe Av., Detroit, Mich., on receipt of price.

ARM CRUSHED

Mr. Richard Kearns, who resides on Bethune street, opposite the G. T. R. station, met with an accident in the C.P.R. yards last evening. He was doing something with the coupling of a box car, when the shunter backed into the car, before he was ready. The result was that he received a badly crushed arm, besides other minor injuries. He was taken to his home, where medical assistance was called for. Another man at the same time narrowly escaped having his leg taken off by the car when it was struck. However, both men were very fortunate, that their injuries were as slight as they were.

ENDS INDIGESTION IN A FEW MOMENTS
Gas, Heartburn and All Misery in Stomach Vanishes
Nothing will remain undigested or sour on your stomach if you will take a little Dinpepsin occasionally. This powerful digestive and antacid, though as harmless and pleasant as candy, will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you can eat.
Eat what you stomach craves, without the slightest fear of Indigestion or that you will be bothered with sour risings, Belching, Gas on Stomach, Heartburn, Headaches from stomach, Nausea, Bad Breath, Water Brash or a feeling like you had swallowed a lump of lead, or other disagreeable miseries. Should you be suffering now from any stomach disorder you can get relief within five minutes.
If you will get from your pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin you could always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and your meals would taste good, because you would know there would be no Indigestion or Sleepless nights or Headache or Stomach misery all the next day; and, besides, you would not need laxatives or liver pills to keep your stomach and bowels clean and fresh.
Pape's Diapepsin can be obtained from your druggist, and contains more than sufficient to thoroughly cure the worst case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. There is nothing better for Gas on the Stomach or sour odours from the stomach or to cure a Stomach Headache.
You couldn't keep a handier or more useful article in the house.

Fatal Train Collision.

St. Thomas, Nov. 5. George Smith, of St. Thomas, the oldest engineer on the Wabash, was killed at Corinth last night, when his engine crashed into the caboose of a train which was making a siding ahead of him. His fireman and the crew of the other train barely saved their lives. Smith was one of the few left of the Grand Trunk engineers who entered the service of the Wabash when the air line was opened in St. Thomas 40 years ago.

Earl Oakes is in Amasa Wood Hospital here with both legs off as a result of a collision with a light engine while traveling on a "jigger" with Mrs. Oakes. He is night operator at the new Sarum station of the Wabash.

MORE DONATIONS COME IN TO THE CHIMES FUND

The staff of the Bell Telephone Co. have shown a kind and practical interest in the Chimes enterprise, their contributions aggregating $7.00, which is greatly appreciated, as is the generosity of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, who though but a few boys, sent in $3.15. Kind out-of-town donations have been received from Mr. Walter Clinton, Chicago, and Mr. Elmer Brown, Des Moines, Iowa. A handsome subscription of $25 has been given by an old resident of the city, and many subscriptions have been paid in, the number of outstanding subscriptions being comparatively small. The whole list stands at $5,125.00.

It would seem as if at least $6,000 was needed to complete the enterprise in a manner satisfactory to citizens. Correspondence is still going on with the different firms tendering for the order, and a letter from a great English firm was received yesterday urging that owing to the advance in the price of bell metal their offer could not remain longer open and indicating that a valuable concession would be made if placed at once.

The committee will meet in the next few days to take what action the subscription list may seem to warrant, and to consider what is best to be done.

Y.M.C.A. MEN'S MEETING TO-MORROW AFTERNOON

When you are out for a walk to-morrow afternoon, just drop in at the Y.M.C.A. at 4.15, and you will not only enjoy yourself, but you will spend a profitable hour with the other men who gather there. The place is cosy and the meeting is bright and snappy. You can count on getting home to tea at 5.15 sharp and in the meantime you have listened to a good speaker, in the person of Rev. W. C. Riddiford, and you have heard some good male singing and had a good time. You will be made welcome. Try it to-morrow.

Wm. E. Gladstone once said "Talk about your problems, the greatest problem is to bring the truths of God's Word into vital touch with the people." This is the object of the Bible Study Department of the Y.M.C.A. and the Sunday Morning Bible Study Club has been formed with the express object of applying the great truths of the Bible to the lives of men. This Club is led in its study by H. M. Gilchrist and is open to all men.

The Boys' Class will meet with Mr. Frank Tait in the class room of the boys' department. All boys are made welcome.

The Mechanical Drawing Class will meet as usual to-night. This class is meeting with real success. There are still a few vacant seats which can be had by applying to-night at the office.

Aims, Objects, Work And Needs Of The Children's Aid Society

There is no philathropic work in this world which good people can take hold of with greater prospect of success than that which concerns children. This is a truth which is especially admitted, and yet it cannot be too often emphasized, for there is still much to be done that is now but feebly attempted. The criminals in our jails, the useless and burdensome paupers in our almshouses, the feeble-minded, and the self-destroyed inmates of our asylums, all point with more or less force to a neglected youth and to golden opportunities allowed to pass unimproved; while the stern fact that these classes cost the people of Ontario nearly one-third of the public revenue gives an additional reason for a wise and vigilant system of child protection.

Few people realize that nearly all confirmed criminals and paupers are made such in early youth—and yet there is hardly any other condition so clearly confirmed by facts than [illegible] environment and bad example and training will almost inevitably produce a bad citizen with all the consequence of crime, pauperism and public expense. Mr. J. J. Kelso, Provincial Superintendent of [illegible] and Children for the Province of Ontario, and those who have worked and fought nobly for the cause of youthful [illegible], crime and pauperism, states that nearly all juvenile offenders are the victims of conditions and circumstances over which they had no control, and are the logical outcome of the early chargers and temptations to which they were subjected. It was to help such children to a better life and to protect society from the increase of crime and pauperism that the Children's Protection Act of Ontario was enacted.

The Act as declared by the Hon. J. M. Gibson, now the Lieutenant-Governor of our Province, aims at a utilization of that vast force of human love and sympathy that goes out to the homeless or unprotected child, rather than to the creation of a state system which would in time become more or less official.

The distinctive aim of a Children's Aid Society is, first of all, to seek to improve the condition of children in their own homes, by encouraging, or if need be, warning parents of their responsibility toward their children. Then where necessary to receive the guardianship of children found destitute, or committed by proper authority. It is worthy of note that the powers of the Society are rarely abused, and the moral tone of thousands of homes has been greatly improved by its intervention. None can tell how much this means in the sum total of human happiness, but years to come will see useful lives develop that otherwise would have been wrecked before they had crossed the harbour bar of youth.

To carry on the local work the society is in need of funds—about $100 a month is required to maintain, warm, feed and clothe the average of a dozen inmates that find a home of safety in the shelter. On the edge of the winter season a special appeal is made to the public. This appeal takes the form of a tag day, described in detail elsewhere in this issue.

A most enjoyable and interesting time is assured those who attend the meeting of the Peterborough centre of the Royal Astronomical Society in the Collegiate Institute to-night. The features of the programme will be an address by Prof. A. DeLury, of the University of Toronto, and the presentation of a handsome telescope to the Society by Hon. J. R. Stratton. Prof. DeLury will speak on "The Astronomy of To-day," and his lecture will be illustrated by slides. He is a fluent and interesting speaker, with a firm knowledge of astronomy, and his address will be a treat. There should be a very large attendance.

The oven bottom of all sizes is 20 inches deep. This is the actual depth of the oven floor, the part of the oven that is of the most value to you. We do not include an inch or two in the bottom of the oven door.

GLASGOW SELECT CHOIR A FINE MUSICAL BODY

Speaking of the Glasgow Select Choir next Tuesday evening, Nov. 8th, the Toronto Star said:

Scarcely [illegible] musical organization that has visited Toronto in recent years has been so favorably spoken of as the Glasgow Select Choir. Since the choir sang here on Sept 29th their name has been in everyone's mouth. The question has been: "Will they come back?" and now the answer comes in the shape of an announcement that they will give two farewell concerts in Toronto one on Saturday, the 5th and the other on Monday, November 7th. In order that all who desire may have an opportunity to hear this superb choir, the highest price of the tickets will be one dollar, and the seats will be arranged that no one need stay away on account of the price of admission. For the reason even there should not be a vacant seat at either concert. A chorus of praise came for each night the boys [illegible] ranged as it is believed that everyone will want to hear both concerts. To hear the Glasgow Choir sing is a positive delight, and the chance to hear such singing comes at long intervals.

BRIGADIER SCOTT POTTER WHO CONDUCTS SERVICES AT TEMPLE

THE LIFE STORY OF SIR SANDFORD FLEMING

[illegible] come upon a man who was a little more sympathetic than the rest. This man also [illegible] and go down to see Sandford Fleming. He [illegible] and hear what you have to say anyway," said he. Don't tell him who sent you to meet him.

The trip worked out in grand style. Sir Sandford listened to what Dean had to say although he was the surest he hadn't any more need of going into the scheme than flying to Mars.

And Dean's proposition was not a thousand miles out of the way. It was a good business proposition. There was a fortune in it for everybody.

Sir Sandford made forceful persuasive action and the result of it was that he decided to put a block of [illegible] so far as that Dean was concerned. Out like a pair of organ stops. Thus did the International Cement Company make a start.

Last year the International went into the big Canadian cement merger on the basis of $200 a share. Sir Sandford Fleming as the largest shareholder, became honorary president of the Canada Cement Company.

Sir Sandford has another phase which should not be passed over. He is a writer and a scholar. He has to the credit of his pen, books on such subjects as "England and Canada," and "Old to New Westminster," in addition to many scientific treatises, chiefly on time question.

As a scholar, he has for thirty years been Chancellor of Queen's University, Kingston. He has never been too busy therefore about the All Red Route to attend a Queen's convocation.

Ever hear the story of how he kindled humor and quiet sense of humour triumphed over a crowd of students who undertook to take a little fun on merriment at him from the gallery of Grand Convocation Hall, at Queen's.

The Convocation Hour was being played and, amid real solemnity, [illegible] professors, gowned and hooded, were walking slowly in double file up the aisle to the platform. Sir Sandford, of course was in advance. In the midst of this impressive academic pageant a group of some students in the gallery began to sing the hymn: "See the mighty host advancing, Satan leading on." At this "Satan's" austere Convocation countenance deserted him, and he could not refrain from smiling. The students saw it. The students at once ceased singing when their joke was taken in such good part.

It may be asked whether this grand old son of Scotland, this veteran disciple of the porridge pot, ever [illegible] back to the land which gave him to Canada.

Most assuredly he does. He has a married daughter living in Scotland and at frequent intervals he journeys across the sea to visit her. He visits also his birthplace, his old boyhood haunts of long, long ago. And when he comes back, Scotland is the subject of conversation in "Winterholm," the beautiful Fleming home on beautiful Chapel street, for a month or six weeks.

On his return from Scotland a year ago, I boarded a car for the "Sandy Hill" district where Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Sandford Fleming and Sir Henry Pate and Sir Frederick Borden and a lot of prominent Ottawa men [illegible] on finding out whether or not he would consent to become president of the cement merger Company. Rumour had for weeks said that he was to be president.

After the [illegible] had [illegible] Sir Sandford is noted, he was asked about his future the presidency.

"No no. I'm not going to bother with that," said Sir Sandford with a smile. "I have too many other things on hand to bother me just now."

He added, dismissing as a thing of no consequence the question of the presidency of a thirty-million dollar corporation, "you have a fine Scotch name and I want to tell you something about Scotland."

And there followed from the lips of this grand old Scot as he sat at ease in the quiet of his library, where he loves to sit one of the grandest and most vividly realistic pictures of Scotland's scenic grandeur which I have ever heard or read.

In the Limestone City he is always the guest of Principal Gordon. They say that when Sir Sandford arrives for a convocation there invariably goes out to the kitchen of the principal's residence an order that quite a bit more porridge than usual be made for breakfast next morning.

At the end of a reminiscent chat with a very dear friend of his not long ago, Sir Sandford Fleming uttered these words:

"I have often thought how grateful I am for my birth into this marvellous world and how anxious I have always been to justify it.

"I have dreamed my little dreams, I have planned my little plans and begrudged no effort to bring about what I regarded as desirable results. I have always felt that the humblest among us has it in his power to do something for his country by doing his duty, and that there is no better inheritance to leave his children than the knowledge that he has done so to the utmost of his ability.

"It has been my great good fortune to have had my lot cast in this goodly land, and to have been associated with its educational and material prosperity. Nobody can deprecate the satisfaction I feel in having had the opportunity and the will to strive for the advancement of Canada and the good of the Empire.

"I am profoundly thankful for length of days, for active, happy years, for friendships formed, and especially for the memory of those dear souls who have enriched my own life while they remained on this side."

A noble and exalted old-age philosophy, and one worthy of this grand and picturesque old figure in Canadian life, who can look back upon a long life of steadfast endeavour, a long life of honour, spotless and unsullied, a long life in which the unkind word has ever been left unspoken.

Diseases Of the Skin

Often appear with sudden changes of temperature. Eczema and Salt Rheum are cured by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Cold, damp weather brings out eczema and salt rheum. Many who are subject to these ailments do not suffer except during the changeable weather of fall and spring.

The irritation, itching and the disagreeable blotches on the skin make the trouble almost unbearable to those who are not familiar with the soothing, healing influence of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Relief comes almost as soon as this ointment is applied. Gradually the eruption disappears, the sores are healed up and the skin is left soft, smooth and natural.

There is always danger of eczema spreading and becoming chronic. For that reason the use of the ointment should be regular and persistent until the cure is thorough and complete.

Mr. John J. Dilory, Lanwood, Algonquin county, N.S., writes:—"I want to say that Dr. Chase's Ointment has proven a great blessing to me. I had salt rheum on one hand, so I could not get it healed up. The [illegible] was most distressing at times. Two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment has cured me completely and I gladly recommend it to every sufferer."

In every home there is a demand for Dr. Chase's Ointment. It is particularly useful where there are children. Chafing and skin irritation are relieved at once. Obstinate wounds are readily healed. Baby eczema and all forms of poisoned or irritated skin are soon cured by this soothing healing ointment. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

YOUNG WOMAN FOUND IN WOODS WAS HANGED BY HER OWN VEIL

Cordelia Decaire, Whose Sister Died Two Weeks Ago, After Being Insane Two Years, Is Believed to Have Become Broken-Hearted Over Her Affliction.

FOUND THE BODY

Hammond, Ont., Nov. 5.—The body of Cordelia Decaire of Bourget, who was married to Theo. Decaire one month ago, was found in the woods near the C.P.R. line here Thursday morning, hanging by a small tree by her automobile veil, which she had rolled up in the form of a cord. Her rosary was hanging on her right hand. On the ground near her was a flask, half full of brandy, her hat and gloves.

The girl has been missing since Wednesday morning, when she left her home to attend early mass. After [illegible] returned to this town by the C.P.R. train, arriving here at noon. She bought a bottle of brandy at the Gendron Hotel, and a bottle of javelle water, a solution for bleaching. She was seen going into the woods late in the afternoon. Nothing was known of her until Thursday night, when her husband found her by the aid of hounds.

It is stated that Mrs. Decaire's sister died two weeks ago, after being insane two years. Mrs. Decaire had nursed her until a month ago, when she married.

It is understood that the young girl was broken-hearted over her sister's death. She wept during the whole church service Wednesday morning. No inquest will be held. Coroner Ferguson of Rockland was called, but he said it was a clear case of suicide.

No trace of the bottle of javelle water could be found. Dr. Bourque, who examined the body, first stated that there were no evidence of her having taken poison. Mrs. Decaire was a particularly handsome young girl. Her husband is 24 years old and a good living man. She was a daughter of Levien Ethier of Clarence, Ont.

FIRST PARLIAMENT OF CHINA ORDERED TO MEET IN 1913

Word Goes Out to the Representatives of China in Foreign Lands to Sever Their Queues.

TO CUT THEIR HAIR

Pekin, Nov. 5.—An official decree was issued yesterday, announcing that an Imperial Parliament, the first in the history of China, would be convoked in 1913.

The police went from house to house informing the occupants of the edict. Presently the dragon banner and paper lanterns appeared above every door. Beyond this there was no public manifestation over the momentous news.

The importance of the throne's concession is appreciated when it is recalled that the provincial assemblies, the first step toward modern and popular government in China, are still in their infancy, and that the senate, the first general body approaching anything like popular representation, met for the first time on Oct. 3 last.

As constituted the senate did not promise much in the way of popular legislation, as one-half of its two hundred members were appointed by the throne. Nevertheless, it early took a stand in favor of an imperial Parliament at an early date, and met with surprising success.

There was consternation in official circles yesterday when an imperial edict was announced commanding all representatives of China in foreign countries to sever their queues.

The edict is believed to be only the forerunner of another commanding all Chinese to follow suit, entailing such a wholesale hair-cut as the world has never before witnessed.

The origin of the queue is not definitely known, but it is supposed that it was forced on the southerners, or Chinese, by the northerners, or Manchus, as a mark of conquest.

THE POSTMASTER SICK FOR YEARS

But He Found Permanent Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mr. John Nolan Had Backache, Nervousness, and Rheumatism. But Cured Them So They Didn't Come Back.

Point Du Nim, Restigouche Co., N. B., Nov. 4 (especial).—That as a remedy of world-wide Kidney Pills has received is the experience of John Nolan, the veteran postmaster of this place. Sixty years of age, but still strong and healthy, Mr. Nolan declares he owes his health to the great Canadian Kidney Remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I used to get up in the morning suffering with Backache, Nervousness and Rheumatism," says the Postmaster. "I was so bad at times that I was confined to my bed. I felt heavy and sleepy after meals, had flashes of light before my eyes and had difficulty in collecting my thoughts. After some several no hope—without benefit I began to take Dodd's Kidney Pills, taking in all fifteen boxes. They were four cents and though I tapped before the pill two cents and I have had no return of my trouble.

Backache, Nervousness and Rheumatism are all caused by disease of Kidneys. To cure them the Kidneys must cure—Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Where the Office Seeks the Man.

Muncie, Ind., Nov. 5.—"Any party that did not have any more sense than to nominate me for the position of justice ought to see elected a man like Lewis Zehner, even though he is a Democrat."

That is the kind of a stump speech Lewis Doddleston, Republican candidate for justice of the peace in Delaware township, this county, has been making. He has been working hard for the election of his opponent, Joseph Zehner, and Mr. Zehner has been working hard to get Doddleston elected. The office pays little and would interfere with the business interests of the candidates.

Lemieux Was Eloquent.

London, Nov. 5. (C.A.P. Cable.)—The Times, apropos of the Cape Town says Hon. Mr. Lemieux's speech Thursday night dwelt eloquently upon the value set on the empire by French Quebec. It had given them the fullest opening, as he truly said, for their ancient language and traditions, and all they prize in life. It would do no less for the Dutch. But it must always be remembered, in Canada and South Africa as in all other parts of the Empire, that the privileges of Empire will vanish if the responsibilities were not largely and conscientiously faced.

FIRE IN ASYLUM.

Brandon Institution Is Destroyed, But No One Is Killed.

Brandon, Man., Nov. 5.—The Asylum for the Insane, which housed over six hundred patients, was completely destroyed by fire, which was discovered at 5.20 yesterday afternoon. So far as could be learned at a late hour last night not a life was lost, the heroic work of the guards and other members of the staff having resulted in the saving of every one of the unfortunate inmates. Screaming and shouting the hundreds of insane were safely herded out of the doomed building just in time to keep them from becoming a prey to the flames, but the real task of the guards and others engaged when the maddest, unfortunates found themselves in the open and started a stampede in every direction. Most of them were soon quieted down, and stood shivering in the piercing cold wind until rounded up and driven into the sheds and stables awaiting their removal to better quarters.

Hundreds of citizens, who soon arrived on the scene in every available automobile and vehicle in Brandon, assisted in the unpleasant task of chasing the patients and bringing them back. Last night the great majority of the unfortunates were safely housed in the Winter Fair building and the Armories, but a number are still missing, and guards and police are scouring the prairie in every direction. The night was intensely cold, and it will fare ill with any who are not found.

Just how the fire started is still a matter of conjecture, but there are apparently well-authenticated rumors showing that one of the patients secured a supply of matches and set fire to the main building, the blaze gaining considerably headway before being discovered. The alarm was sent into the Brandon fire department at 5.20, and the whole brigade turned out to the asylum, which is on a hill a mile and a half away from the centre of the city.

When the fire was first noticed a terrible panic ensued among the patients, and the guards had their hands full trying to control the unfortunate. Nothing was done at first to combat the fire, as all realized the terrible necessity of getting the patients out of harm's way.

The scenes in all parts of the building could not have been duplicated outside a mad house, and the remarkable escape of all in the building is ascribed to the splendid work of the guards and the staff, and the heroic work of several of the patients, who seemed to realize the danger and remained cool. Other too dense to realize their danger acted as calmly as to allay the growing panic. A number of patients were injured in their hurried flight from the burning buildings, but, so far as can be learned, none seriously.

COUNT ON UP-STATE VOTE.

Roosevelt Group Grant Dix a Majority of 40,000 in New York County.

New York, Nov. 5.—There was a meeting of the Republican New York County leaders yesterday afternoon at county headquarters, and, after it adjourned, County Chairman Griscom announced his estimate of what the vote here would be at the coming state election.

Mr. Griscom believes that the plurality of John A. Dix, the Democratic candidate for governor, in New York County, will not be more than 40,000. Although Mr. Griscom's political jurisdiction does not embrace all of the greater city, he said that, roughly speaking, he thought Dix's plurality in the five boroughs would not be over 70,000, giving him the most liberal figures.

In 1908 New York County gave Chanler, Democratic candidate for governor, a plurality of 49,234, and the Democrats carried the greater city by 59,904. Republican leaders declare that the vote up-state will be enough to elect Stimson, as it did Hughes in 1908.

Mr. Griscom added that, considering the marked decrease in registration and the consequent falling off in the total vote, the Republicans would be satisfied if they kept the Democratic plurality in New York City to the figures of two years ago.

Chairman Prentice of the Republican State Committee and Chairman Huppuch of the Democratic State Committee are working on more detailed estimates of the vote for the whole state, which they expect to make public to-day. In previous statements, given before receiving reports from all the leaders, Mr. Prentice estimated the Republican plurality at from 90,000 to 110,000, and Huppuch talked of a Democratic plurality of about 150,000.

Broke His Neck.

Edmonton, Alta., Nov. 5.—The body of L. G. White, aged 30, a Scotchman, was found in the basement of the new court house yesterday morning. It is supposed he fell and broke his neck.

THE RACKING PAINS OF RHEUMATISM

Can Only Be Cured Through the Blood—Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Which Act Directly on the Blood

Rheumatism will rack you just as long as there is acid in the blood to cause rheumatism. That's the whole trouble—acid in the blood. Cold, damp weather may start the pains going, but it is not the cause. That is rooted in the blood and can only be cured through the blood. Years ago when medical science did not know as much about the complaint as to-day, rheumatic sufferers were given something to rub on the swollen tender joints. Some people who do not know any better still adhere to the old-fashioned way, but it does not cure their rheumatism—and never will.

When the acid is driven from the blood the rheumatism is gone—it's cured. The thing is to get the right medicine to drive the acid out. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured more cases of rheumatism than any other disease except anaemia. They do this because they enrich the blood supply, thus toning up the system to a point where the rheumatic acid is expelled through the natural channels and the trouble disappears. They were intended to do this and they do it thoroughly. Mr. Harry O'Donoghue, Viscount, Sask., says:

About four years ago I came here from Scotland for the purpose of taking up land. Even at so recent a date as this the country was quite different from what it is to-day. Then the nearest shack to me was ten miles distant, and the nearest town much further away. In those days homesteading was not all sunshine, and in the spring of 1907 I contracted a severe cold. I had never been sick in my life before, and paid no attention to the cold, and almost before I realized it I was down with an attack of pleurisy and as the pains of this trouble began to leave me those of rheumatism set in, and my sufferings were something terrible. Help was sent for, but it did me no good, nor did the medicine given me have any effect, and for five months I was confined to the house. Then one day I had an unexpected visit from my brother who came from Australia, and whom I had not seen for nine years. When he saw my condition he at once urged me to get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as he knew of a number of cases in which they had made marvellous cures in Australia. The result was he went to town and purchased six boxes, and before I had used the last box I was out working with my oxen and am now as healthy as any man in the province. For this I must thank the Pills and my brother's advice, and I strongly recommend the Pills to other rheumatic sufferers."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WOMEN WERE HYSTERICAL

Ottawa Free Press In Editorial on Result in Drummond-Arthabasca Says That Liberal Party Must Carry on an Educational Campaign in the Province of Quebec—A Lesson to the Party, Says Journal.

Montreal, Nov. 5.—Several of the Liberal organizers coming in from the back countries tell harrowing tales of the way in which popular feeling has been aroused to the highest pitch against the navy in these parts. For a Liberal worker to enter a house and endeavor to talk navy, was a sign for an up-roar, punctuated by a copious outpouring of tears on the part of the women folk.

Mederic Martin, M.P. for St. Mary's, tells of one case which he witnessed at St. Albert. Here a woman, at whose house the Liberal workers had called, grew hysterical when the navy was broached. "Pas de marine, pas de marine," she screamed, lashing herself into a terrible fury, and afterwards lapsing into a state of unconsciousness. A doctor and a priest had to be summoned.

Latest returns from Drummond indicate the final majority for Mr. Gilbert will be between 180 and 200. The outlying polls have not materially changed the standing of the candidate.

Private advices received here are to the effect that Henri Bourassa has decided to oppose Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Quebec East at the next general election.

This news is of the most significant character, for it will be remembered that after Bourassa left the Federal House and went into provincial politics, he entered the lists against Sir Lomer Gouin, the Quebec Premier, in the St. James' Division of Montreal, and actually defeated him in an enormously strong Government constituency. Since then Mr. Bourassa has grown much stronger.

The Ottawa Free Press, the Government organ, discusses the situation in Quebec in the following editorial: "There is no use blinking our eyes to the fact that the Government's hold on Quebec is weakening, but unlike the cause in Drummond, there is time to repair the damage before it is too late. A systematic campaign of education must be started now. Instead of running about the world, participating in the wedding of the Empire, members of the Cabinet will have to stay at home and set to work welding Canada, nor must these campaigns be confined to Quebec. The war must be carried into Ontario and the other provinces, of which the Government may receive another painful awakening. That is the lesson of Drummond and it is not a Laurier lesson nearly so much as it is the Liberal party lesson."

A sad sequel to the defeat of Mr. Perrault occurred Thursday night, when the daughter of Mayor Tourigny died suddenly of heart failure. Tourigny is the leading Liberal of the district, and has been the heart and soul of the campaign, his offices being used as the Liberal centre. His daughter, Mrs. Massicotte, a young woman of 28, had also taken a keen interest in the election, and was as much disappointed as her father at the result. She stayed at her father's office until it was plain that Mr. Perrault was defeated, and then went home. A few minutes after reaching her residence she suddenly collapsed.

Much sickness is due to nervous troubles. Headache, dizziness, epilepsy and insanity are nervous troubles. Then there is a large class of disorders which arise from a weakness of the nerves of an organ or part, as weak lungs, heart, stomach, kidney, bladder, eyes, etc. Dyspepsia and indigestion are usually the result of nervous disorders.

150 Girls Will Start Out Next Saturday To Tag Everybody

The ladies of the Children's Aid Society met yesterday afternoon and completed arrangements for tag day, which will be Saturday next. It is the intention of the Society to tax the school children on Friday by selling them buttons. On Saturday morning the ladies will start out at eight o'clock in the morning. The city has been divided into districts, and in each of these there will be two ladies in charge. In all there will be one hundred and fifty girls who will patrol the streets and by their charm, and winning ways will tag every person and everything they meet. They will cover Peterborough from Auburn to the farthest southern boundary It is hoped that the citizens will respond to the demands of this worthy object by contributing as liberally as they can.

Musical Afternoon Of The Guild Of Good Fellowship

The St. John's Guild of Good Fellowship will meet as usual in the Princess Theatre at 3 p.m. to-morrow. Being Fellowship Day the meeting will be of an informal nature and a musical afternoon will be indulged in. The director will give a short address on "Singing," and the talents of the afternoon will be taken up with sacred songs and solos. Lovers of music and singing will find plenty of delight there, and no doubt a large number will be present. There is nothing more pleasing than a large body of voices and a good song is always helpful, as well as attractive. All men of 18 years or over are most cordially invited.

At dinner, especially—as at any "meat meal"—Regal Lacer proves a great help to weak digestions. It tones the stomach, and does the nerves good. Yet it is no mere stimulant, and certainly not an intoxicant.

REAL ESTATE BOOMING

That real estate is booming in this city is evidenced by the mere reference to the business of one firm alone in this city. Several important real estate changes have been effected by the firm of A. Brown & Co., and the amount of business transacted by Mr Brown since the first of October has amounted to $65,900. This is conclusive evidence that the real estate boom in this city has by no means been reduced, but is showing great activity. Mr. Brown, with considerable progressiveness and ingenuity, has carried through several very successful deals, among them being exchanges for property here for land in Vancouver.

GEORGE AND SMOKE

Mr. Dan Whetung, Jr., manager of Albert Smoke, the young Chemong Indian, who has twice in succession captured the Examiner senior road race, and who, on Thanksgiving Day, smashed all records for the event, is endeavouring to arrange a race or a series of races, for his protege with Jimmy George, the Beaverton Indian, who won the Hamilton Herald race on Monday for the second time. Mr Whetung will endeavour to have the race take place in the Brock Street rink, in the near future. In case only one race is arranged Smoke would be willing to meet George in a fifteen mile contest. In the event of two races he wishes the distance to be 10 and 20 miles.

Mr. Whetung says that Smoke will be back next year to try and carry the Examiner road race for the third time.

GOLF

The final game for the cup presented by Mrs. Robert Stuart of Chicago, was played Thursday afternoon, Nov. 3, by Miss Helen Davidson and Miss Elsie Anderson, resulting in a victory for Miss Davidson.

CUPID'S WIG AND GOWN

BY TOM GALLON

(Author of "Tatterley," &c.)

Unless you are absolutely certain as to the result, do not approach a lady on the question most vital to your future before dinner: it is a mistake, and may place you in that position (should she refuse you) which will make you wish that the dinner was never to happen at all.

This was exactly what John Medlow did, and you shall hear the result. Not that one must imagine for a moment that John was certain as to the result in the first place, his conceit of himself, as our Scotch neighbors would say, was not sufficiently great—and, in the second place, it seemed such a daring thing for any man to approach such a dainty little lady as Miss Phyllis Holt. But when one bears in mind the fact that for many, many months John Medlow had been making up his mind to speak on that vital matter, and had never yet found courage, and when one remembers also the fact that man is but mortal, and woman entrancing, he must be forgiven.

It was all the fault of Miss Taplin. Miss Taplin was most anxious, for many reasons, that John Medlow should marry Phyllis: it would be a good match, and John was just one of those steady plodding sort of fellows, who could be trusted to have his slippered feet on the fender for something more than three hundred evenings in the year. Phyllis being, what Miss Taplin termed "a little flighty," all this was just as it should be. More than that, John was rich, so was Phyllis very rich indeed. Miss Taplin, being a worldly woman, saw in this again the fitness of things, and thus it was that John Medlow went to dinner.

He had been to dinner on a great many other occasions, and the very servants, with an eye to romantic things, were careful of his hat and coat, and knew just into which room to usher him. Going steadily and somewhat heavily across the hall on this particular occasion, John Medlow made up his mind that he would postpone the matter for another evening; he really felt too nervous, and too little sure of himself, to speak then.

That, of course, was all very well from John's point of view: when Phyllis presently flitted into the room, John changed his mind. For if ever that particularly dainty little lady had looked entrancing, she looked entrancing that night; if ever she had appeared small and frail, and in need of some strong man's arm about her, she appeared so then. The very crown and summit of her bright hair reached not quite to John Medlow's white tie: he felt bigger than ever, as he looked down at her. She, for her part, was as cool and calm as anyone well could be, and apparently utterly obvious of the storm raging within John Medlow's breast.

Then before John quite knew what was happening, he was holding a hand which seemed absurdly small, and was blurting out, in a torrent of tempestuous words, all that had been hidden in his heart so long. He was going to do this, and he was going to do that; there was no one in the wide world like her, and the heavens from whence she had sprung had absolutely decided never again to make anybody on the same model; it simply couldn't be done. More than that, he was going to be very good to her; and he didn't mind how long he waited, if she required time in which to make up her mind.

She said "No." Not exactly in that word, perhaps; she gilded the bitter pill a little: said that he was her best friend (oh, the dear old abominable word, that has been used so often, and under such sad circumstances!); and that there would never be anyone like him, in that sense, but she couldn't marry him. She was a very little sorry, perhaps, that he had broken down (that fine completes confidence there had been between them: wouldn't it be better if he made an excuse, and went away and forgot all about it? A little hopelessly he reminded her that he was to stay to dinner, and that Miss Taplin might say unkind and undeserved things.

"And I suppose you'll sit opposite to me and look glum and horrid and make me miserable," she said, tapping her foot a little petulantly on the floor.

"I'm sorry you should think that," he said. "I've no right to ask it: I know but I suppose there's someone else someone who fills your heart more than your—your friend could do, eh?"

"Yes, you have a right to ask it: and I don't mind telling you."

"Does he know his luck?" asked John.

"No—and he never will," she replied.

Itching Scalp Falling Hair

To prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove dandruff, allay itching and irritation of the scalp, and promote the growth and beauty of the hair, frequent shampoos with Cuticura Soap, assisted by occasional dressings with Cuticura Ointment, succeed when other methods fail. Cuticura Soap and Ointment have been equally effective in the treatment of torturing, disfiguring scalp humors and the alarming loss of hair which so often results. For example, read how George E. Jefferson, 1518 Reed St., Philadelphia, tells of his remarkable cure.

"My disease started with a little pimple on my head. Then it began to itch. The more I would scratch, the worse it grew until it spread all over my head. So I went to the doctor. But my head grew as raw as a piece of beef and my hair commenced to fall out in bunches. So I changed doctors. My head at this time was so sore I could not touch it. Then I decided to go to the hospital. They began to treat it but it improved very slowly. For over three years I was a sufferer from this disease. I thought all hope of a permanent cure were impossible. A friend, upon seeing the condition of my head which was a mass of running corruption—asked me if I had tried the Cuticura Remedies. I told him nothing would do me any good, but being very anxious to be cured, I decided to try them. The first treatment brought immediate relief. My hair became alive and stopped falling out, all the scale left and now I am perfectly well and have a full head of hair. I can truthfully say that it was entirely due to the use of the Cuticura Remedies."

"I see: he doesn't appreciate you. Who is the brute?"

"He's not a brute, and you've no right to say so. He's a mistaken, silly fellow, and he doesn't understand: but I shall never love anyone else."

"Can't I do anything?" Then, as she looked at him in perplexity, he went on blunderingly. "You see I'm so very fond of you, that if I could put things straight a bit you know—I'd be glad. Do I know him?"

She seemed to nod her head slowly, as Miss Taplin bustled into the room. Miss Taplin was a little woman of pinched aspect very bright and eager, and occasionally very much in the way. She welcomed John Medlow effusively; and was quite certain, in her own mind, that that gentleman had at last brought things to a crisis, and that her dearest wishes had been realized. So they went in to dinner: Miss Taplin to take the head of the table, and Phyllis to face John Medlow.

Miss Taplin had been quite convinced, in her own mind, that the young people had settled things to their own satisfaction; she was somewhat surprised, therefore, to find that they had nothing to say to each other. She determined to encourage them. She plunged, with much coughing and many blushes, into a highly ingenuous account of a flirtation she had had far away back in the 'nineties with a gentleman of property in Derby county; she was proceeding to enlarge upon the way in which he had first addressed her, and the feelings he had inspired within her, when John Medlow, who had been watching Phyllis for some time, and trying to make up his mind as to a certain theory that had occurred to him, broke in with a careless remark.

"By the way, Miss Holt," and Miss Taplin glanced up quickly, in some wonderment that there should be no more familiar form of address, "I saw a friend of yours to-day."

"Of mine?" She looked up at him quickly.

"Yes, a very old friend," said John, twisting his wine glass round and round, and looking at it as he spoke. "Gilbert Kenshaw."

He looked up just in time to see a bright wave of color spread over her face and neck: she did not meet his eyes, and he sighed to think that his shot had gone home, and that he, he—the man.

"Indeed?" she said, when she had mastered her voice. "Is Gilbert well?"

"I don't like to hear you speak even of friends by their Christian names—my love," said Miss Taplin a little sharply. "It was all very well of course, when you were in a different position—but now—"

"Now I am entitled to do as I like," broke in Phyllis, flashing a glance at her. "Gilbert Kenshaw is a very old friend of mine, and, although his profession does keep him so very much occupied, that doesn't make any difference."

"Gilbert is quite well at least—what am I talking about? I'm sorry to say that he has knocked up completely. I called on him, just to make inquiries, you know. Been working too hard, I expect—it's hard times, I suppose, and for guineas—"

Miss Holt rose abruptly from the table.

"This room is ridiculously hot," she said: "perhaps you'll entertain Mr. Medlow, Auntie, while he finishes his dessert."

Some ten minutes later John Medlow was seated beside Phyllis Holt talking quietly to her. Miss Taplin still with that amazing idea in her mind, had absented herself on some pretext or other.

Why didn't you tell me his name? it would have saved a great deal of trouble," he said.

"I—I really don't know," she asked, in a low voice, and without looking at him.

"Pretty fair. Something seems to have worried him—he almost gave one the idea that he has given up hope—doesn't seem to care, you know."

She was silent for a moment or two, and then, turning suddenly towards him, she spoke. John Medlow noticed that her face had again that curious flush upon it. Something in the kindly glance of the man, however, must have inspired her with confidence, for she spoke as she had never spoken to a man in all her life before.

"John—it's deplorable, I know, but I'm desperately fond of him. It's an atrocious thing to say to you after what you've said to me, but I'd rather tell you than anyone else. You don't mind?"

"Oh, yes I mind a great deal," said John. "And yet I like it, because it shows by what a very little I have missed you. Go on, tell me about it."

So she told him about it. She reminded him of what he knew already, that this Gilbert Kenshaw had been her greatest friend, when he was little more than a school boy, and she a girl in short frocks—that they had both been equally poor, and equally friendless. She told him what he had not known, that she and Gilbert Kenshaw had made a boy-and-girl vow to be faithful to each other; and that the man had broken it.

"Ever since I came into all this ridiculous money, he has studiously avoided me. He calls me 'Miss Holt,' he buries himself in those musty chambers of his, and never lets anyone see him."

"Why don't you go and rout him out and tell him his luck? Take him by the shoulders, and shake it into him."

"John, you're perfectly horrid! Don't you understand that I would rather die than let him think for a moment—"

"I'm sorry, I never thought of that," said John Medlow. "Only, you see, the case is rather serious: Gilbert has been burning the midnight oil to such an extent probably with the vague hope of making a fortune in about a couple of days, sufficient to lay beside yours, that he is really off his head: I don't mind telling you that I've been with him nearly all day (I don't in the least see what you've got to squeeze my hand about), and he's really very ill. More than that, he's losing the—not a lifetime—"

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"Oh he'll get over the illness with rest and care; but the other business he won't. I suppose you know what a brief is; well, he's had first one sent to him by rather an important firm of solicitors, too. It—is to be a big case; and it meant a bigger chance than I've had in all my life. I don't need it, of course, because I'm rich enough already, but I've sat in those Courts, day in and day out, in wig and gown, and scarcely ever spoken a dozen words on behalf of anybody. And here is a lucky youngster, with a tat and, and a chance to take a big leap up the ladder; and he can't do it. He may wait five years for another. I—don't will happen if he doesn't appear?" she asked.

"Oh, they'll simply mention that he is unable to appear; and in all probability some smart junior will snap it up and snap up the others to follow. They won't give it to me: I'm too big a fool. And they won't trouble Mr Gilbert Kenshaw again, for a long time to come."

For the whole of one long night Miss Phyllis Holt lay awake. She was a girl of rare singleness of purpose: she saw only the sick man, and saw one of the chances of life slipping away from him. The possession of money had taught her its power; the possession of beauty had taught her that she held a greater power still. More than that, she wanted to do something which could raise her above all other women in the eyes of Gilbert Kenshaw; and she thought she saw the way.

"Oh, if I can only show him that I want to help him, that I'd risk anything for his sake!" she said to herself, as she dressed hurriedly that morning. "There ought to be some way. I might even manage to speak nicely to a Judge or two, and put things right. One thing is certain, I can't sit here: I must go down and see him."

It happened that it was one of the foggiest mornings ever known in late autumn: it was absolutely impossible for anyone to see across the street, even that aristocratic street wherein Miss Phyllis Holt lived. When in course of time she managed to find a hansom cab, the man suggested, when she gave him the address, that he would do his best, but, added cheerfully, "Don't you blame me, Miss, if we bumps into anythink."

The Temple is an awkward place to find one's way about in: there are so many courts and alleys, and little passages and staircases: on a foggy morning (and the fog was thicker than ever down in Fleet Street) it is still more difficult. But at last Phyllis found her way up that long flight of stairs which led to the chambers of Mr Gilbert Kenshaw: saw the name in white paint dimly on the door: and knocked. For Mr Kenshaw as a matter of fact was so poor that he lived in the chambers which he was supposed to use solely for professional purposes.

A boy opened the door and came out into the fog on the staircase to look at her. After some small delay, he asked her to come in: and she followed him into the room, which was half sitting-room and half office, and looked about her. One gas jet was burning, and, conspicuous on a desk among a pile of books and papers was a ghastly looking wig-box, with a very new-looking barrister's wig upon it, flung over the back of a chair was the black stuff gown which belonged to it.

"Is Mr. Kenshaw in?" asked Phyllis of the boy.

"Ain't never bin out this fort night," replied the boy, who was of a freckled aspect with very sharp features. "If you ask me, I won't never go out no more, simply wearin' meself away, I is. An' 'im doin' at ten-thirty sharp in Smith v. 'Lectric Syndicate. Just my luck, if I'd on'y stopped in all right, the never 'ave wouldn't 'ave 'ad no chance to chip me about in an tell me I wasn't earnin' me wages. Just my luck!"

"Where is Mr. Kenshaw?"

"In bed," retorted the boy. "Ole Pails and Broome says 'e's bin ravin' and shoutin' about the case, an about some girl."

"Boy, answer me carefully and quickly and I'll give you more money than you could earn in a week," said Phyllis, with a little gasp. "When Mr. Kenshaw goes into Court what does he have to do?"

"Sit and read the paper," replied the boy. "I carries the blue bag, an'

Thomas A. Edison did another wonderful thing when, having brought his Phonograph to a point where not even the most critical could ask for improvement, he multiplied its entertaining ability by two.

He did this by producing a Phonograph Record that plays, sings or talks twice as long as the Standard Edison Records.

He did this without increasing the size of the Record, making it a Record that can be used on old instruments as well as new.

He did it without affecting in any way the clear, rich, musical tones for which Edison Records have always been famous.

He calls this double-length Record "Amberol."

INTERESTING DEBATE ON THE CANADIAN NAVY

Members of St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society Discussed the Important Question Last Evening

SOME CLEVER SPEECHES

A large and appreciative audience listened to the debate on the Canadian Navy in the St. Alphonsus Lyceum last night. All the speakers spoke well and to the point, and the dominating note in every address was loyalty. The question at issue was: "Resolved that Canada should have a Navy," and the fact that it coincided with the Drummond election gave it an especial interest. Miss Ethel Hayes and Miss Aileen Sullivan defended the thesis and Miss Sue Kelly and Miss B McNamara spoke for the negative.

A Country that aspires to the status of a nation must be prepared to meet the responsibilities of a nation, said Miss Hayes. The first duty of a nation was to protect its territory and people. For this a maritime country needed a Navy. Therefore we have been altogether dependent on the Mother Country for much protection. But now we have reached that stage in national development where we can no longer consistently with our self-respect, look to another country to fight our battles, or to protect our commerce. There was no question of disloyalty in establishing a Navy any more than in maintaining a Militia. If for a hundred years our population keeps on growing at the present rate of progress we will then have double the population of England, and if our Navy grows accordingly we will be able to defend the Mother Country instead of looking to her to defend us. The establishment of a Navy will mean Canadian money spent in Canada, whereas the policy of our opponents means handing over $25,000,000 to Great Britain and getting nothing for it.

For the Negative, Miss Kelly urged the advantages of the present connection. The safety of our commerce, the security of our shores, the safeguarding of our citizens, the protection of the British Flag all constitute enormous advantages which every Canadian likes. A Canadian Navy is a step towards separation. If Canada intends separation as her ultimate destiny then by all means go ahead with the Navy. But we don't want to separate. Imperial sentiment has not been so strong for a hundred years. Why then this Navy? Has England ever failed us when we needed her assistance? And is not the past the best guarantee for the future? They should remember division means weakness, better a strong Navy in England than several weak ones scattered over the four seas. Anyway, the contemplated Navy was a mere toy. Why spend millions on useless vessels. Why embark in the mad competition of the Naval powers. Was there no lesson in the fact that Great Britain spent annually $161,000,000 on her Navy, Germany $90,000,000, United States $80,000,000 and France $63,000,000?

Miss Aileen Sullivan assumed the role of an angel of Peace, and reminded us that in theory we all wooed the fair goddess but when we had to choose between our sweetheart and our self-interest we made choice of the latter. War was regrettable, but war was inevitable as long as human nature remained what it was. Canada was taking her place amongst the Nations of the earth. It looked as if she would become one of the great Countries of the world. This great development was her greatest danger because it would naturally arouse the cupidity of her sister powers. Therefore as she grew rich and prosperous she should increase her defensive strength, for self-preservation was one of the first laws of nature. In fifty years, which is a short time in the life of a Nation, Canada will be an important world power, and will then need a Navy. It must grow with the Country's growth. Their opponents scoffed at their toy navy. But they should remember it was only the beginning. Was the first ship of the Imperial Navy a Dreadnought? They might say Canada was protected by the Monroe Doctrine but Canada was not prepared to accept charity from another country, and anyway if the Yankee once got in he might take such a fancy to the place that it would be difficult to induce him to leave. Division spelled weakness, as their opponents said, and that was the great weakness of the Empire. For how could England protect an Empire that covered the earth? So far then from our Navy being a step towards separation it is loyalty, the strongest link in the Empire's chain, because if every part of the Empire could look after itself then England would be free to concentrate all her strength on her own defence.

"The establishment of a Navy, said Miss McNamara, is simply an invitation to acts of agression. It is like the small boy going round with a chip on his shoulder and asking the larger boy to knock it off, and if experience teaches anything it is that the larger boy would be only too willing to accommodate him. If England is to remain Mistress of the Seas she must keep up the two-power standard, she must have a Navy equal to the combined strength of any other two powers. At present Germany is pressing her very closely, and the logical way for Canada to act would be to contribute her unit to the home navy. If we did this we would help to maintain Britain Mistress of the Seas, and would help to maintain the two-power standard, and then we need have little fear of attack. The British Flag would protect as the prestige of the British Navy would render us invisible.

After lengthy consideration, the judges of the debate, Rev. Father McColl and Miss M. A. O'Connell, decided in favor of the affirmative. Father McColl complimented the four speakers on the very excellent debate and assured them that it was very hard to decide as to who were the victors. Rev. Father Casey in moving the vote of thanks paid a tribute to the freedom enjoyed under the English Flag. It was England's proud boast that she protected her subjects whenever and wherever they were attacked, and of this they had an illustration. The other day in Portugal when the Union Jack saved from insult and injury the Irish Dominican Monks of Lisbon. He did not claim to be an authority on Canadian politics but he could not see any ground for the cry of separation in connection with this Navy. If Canadian soldiers died for the flag in S. Africa should not Canadian marines fight for it in the English Channel.

The musical part of the programme was supplied by Miss Stella Ure nor was supplied by Mis Stella Clery, Miss Florence Leahy, Mr. New and Master Joe Clancy. Little Joe delighted the audience with his singing of "Dear Ireland" and "The Moonbeam, the Rose and You."

The next general meeting will be held on November 18th when "An Evening With Tennyson" will fill the bill. The Committee will met as usual on Monday evening at Eight o'clock. Miss Aileen Sullivan has been co-opted on the committee.

HUNTER FELL FROM A PIER 15 FEET TO ROCK BELOW AND WAS SERIOUSLY HURT

Annual Hunt of Bottle Lake Club Brought to Sudden Close by Unfortunate Accident to Mr. Arthur Head, of this City—Was Brought Home Saturday Night.

PIER GAVE WAY

The annual deer hunt of the Bottle Lake Hunt Club was brought to a sudden termination by an unfortunate accident to one of its members, in the person of Mr. Arthur Head, whose home in this city is at 257 Bethune Street. On Wednesday morning about ten o'clock, Messrs. J. Fitzgerald and Arthur Head were crossing the dam on the long slide on Stony Creek in Cavendish Township when the accident occurred. At the point where they were crossing, the piers were some fifteen feet high. Mr. Head was standing on a pier about four feet below the platform of the dam, and in an endeavour to lift one of the dogs up on to the platform, the animal resisted, and the end on which Mr. Head was standing gave way, and he fell with great force, fifteen feet, to the flat rock below, falling headlong into the creek.

MIGHT HAVE DROWNED

Had it not been for the timely action of Mr. Jack Fitzgerald, who was the only one with Mr. Head at the time, the latter would have drowned, as he rolled into the water and having been stunned so badly in the fall, he was unable to help himself. He fell on his head and shoulder, and falling on hard rock, the injuries were rendered much more severe getting the injured man out on the shore, Mr. Fitzgerald gave the camp call and soon Dr. Amys, who was a member of the party, although a mile and a half away, was on the scene and rendered what temporary assistance he could. A stretcher was made and Mr. Head was carried into the camp, about a mile distant. It was found that he was suffering from a fracture to the base of the brain, and in his condition at that time, it was impossible to bring him to the city before Saturday. However he was given every attention possible while in camp, and on Saturday morning at six o'clock, the injured man, in charge of Dr. Amys and M. O'Brien, started for the city, arriving here about nine o'clock in the evening. Mr. Head is to-day resting easily at his home and is doing as well as can be expected.

HAD SECURED TWO DEER

On the first day of the hunt the party had secured two deer, and had not the accident occurred, would no doubt have secured many more. Most of the parties seem to be enjoying good luck in getting a fair number of the antlered monarchs. Messrs. Corcoran and Fitzgerald will remain in camp until the end of the week.

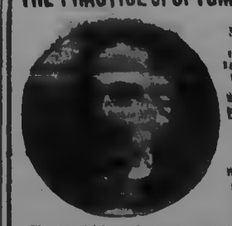
THE PRACTICE of OPTOMETRY



The Science of how to fit Eyeglasses when needed. Eye Examination to determine the necessity for glasses.

The furnishings of glasses needed has in the past decade become almost an absolute and exact science, which is based upon purely mathematical and optical principals. This is now so firmly established that laws regulating the practice of Optometry are written in the statute books of 21 of the States of America, two of the Provinces of Canada, and in Great Britain. It is a foregone conclusion that similar legislation will be enacted in other States and Provinces. We believe that it is not possible to examine too thoroughly, to make the mathematical calculation too carefully for the eye, when so much comfort, happiness and ability to earn a livelihood, is so dependent upon such.

A NEW LEASE OF LIFE FOR CRIPPEN--EXECUTION STAYED

Home Secretary Interferes But No Reasons Are Given For His Act---"Something Will Yet Intervene to Prove My Innocence," Says Crippen When He is Told of the Postponement.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 7.—Contrary to all expectations, Crippen has secured a new lease of life. The execution of the death sentence has been postponed till November twenty-fifth by order of the Home Secretary, Winston Churchill. The reason is not definitely given, but it is explained that Churchill is giving consideration to Solicitor Newton's plea of commutation to a life sentence. It is recalled that there is an English custom to give the condemned criminal at least two Sundays between the final hearing and the execution. To-day's papers make light of the cables from Philadelphia telling of Attorney Tolan's appeal to Washington on behalf of Crippen. They also characterize Doctor Munyon's offer of fifty thousand dollars' reward for information as to Mrs. Crippen (Belle Elmore) being still alive and taking part in a plot to kill her husband as nonsensical. Nevertheless, it is believed the story has some influence on Churchill through his United States relatives.

"Something will yet intervene to prove my innocence," said Crippen when told of the postponement of the execution. He was overjoyed. Later news from Washington says that Lawyer Tolan has been referred to the British Consul with his plea for interference. The police of New York and Chicago scoff at the idea that Mrs. Crippen is hiding somewhere within their limits.

WAGGON WAS STRUCK

What might have proved a serious accident, happened this morning about 11 o'clock, when Mr. Robt. Wolstenholme, local coal dealer, was driving across the street car track opposite Dr. Robinson's Livery stable. A Jackson Park car came along and before the rear part of the waggon could clear the track it was struck. One of the wheels was broken off but no other damage was done.

HORSE KILLED

Mr. Young, who resides near Young's Point, was returning home on Saturday evening, after spending the day in the city, when unfortunately one of his horses collided with a street car near Auburn. The animal was so badly injured that it died yesterday morning. It appears that the iron support on the front of the car struck the horse, but the peculiar part of it was that the horse was injured on the opposite side to that struck by the car, and as the other horse would prevent it from being thrown against anything, it is a mystery how that side was injured. A veterinary surgeon was called, but the left hind leg was broken, so that nothing could be done. The horse was valued at $150.

REPEATING HOME CONDITIONS.

Emperor Nicholas of Russia is visiting his right trusty cousin, Emperor William of Germany, and the latter is making him feel at home. A hunting party, with the advantage all on the Russian Emperor's side, and suggestive of home conditions, is being organized. A battalion of soldiers with foresters had been engaged for some days in the forest near Potsdam, assembling some 1,500 deer, hare and other four-footed game within an enclosure, and from which the animals were driven out to stay past a line of platform concealed by pine boughs, and upon which the royal party and twenty-two other hunters had taken positions ready for the killing. Emperor Nicholas was permitted the first shot. This is a good deal like the hunting he enjoys at home. He has his wretched subjects as much at his mercy or his cruelty, as he will have the deer; they are driven like dumb beasts and brought within reach of the tyrannic methods that send Russian subjects in droves to Siberia, or the scaffold, without fair trial and with no better chance than the deer hounded and hunted within range of the Emperor's rifle in the Potsdam woods. A good deal of ground will have to be travelled before Russia, and even Germany, come into a realization of the duties and principles of the highest civilization as expressed in the widest constitutional enjoyment by the people of civil liberty and freedom, such as is enjoyed by Great Britain and other countries with civil institutions founded upon the British model.

MAKE A BEGINNING.

The article that appeared in Saturday's Examiner outlining suggestions of undertakings that might well be carried out in the interests of the city, comprises a programme of advancement which so far as we have hereunto to learn, meets with the warm approval of the leading business men and ratepayers. As is to be expected there are some details subject to exception, but that fact does not affect the general contention that the suggestions named are worthy, of the most earnest attention of all who desire the progress and upbuilding of the city.

Of course, with so large a programme, it would not be expected that it could be carried out in its entirety at an early date; but there is nothing to prevent the adoption of its principle, as a Peterborough Policy one, as remarked on Saturday, "to be worked up to and worked out."

Our city fathers are called upon to take some definite action involving a forward movement. Run to administration—collecting taxes and paying them out, merely keeping the machinery oiled and running in the same old forefoot ways is not the whole duty, and should not be the whole function, of civic government. There must be a definite and aggressive policy of advance, the adoption of a definite programme to be worked out and applied by degrees, as circumstances permit. While one feature of an advance programme is being carried out, sight must not be lost of others, but the desired general end, should be held steadily in view.

There must be a beginning made and obviously the first point to consider will be that of doing equal justice to all sections of the city and thus putting all citizens in a position of harmony and of a friendly attitude to the "Peterborough Policy." There does not seem to be any reason why the authorities and the citizens should not take into immediate consideration the question of the construction of an overhead bridge across the river at Hunter street. We all know that the residents of East City have been long complaining, and not without reason, of the lack of a street car service. In the beginning, the overhead bridge is the first step towards doing justice to this section of the city and opening a profitable new line of service to the street railway company. The burden of cost of such a bridge might very fairly be shared by the Quaker Oats Company, the Canadaian Pacific railway company, the Street Railway company, and the city. The bridge would mean to the Cereal Company and the Railway Company an uninterrupted traffic; it would mean to the public the removal of the level crossing danger; and it would permit of the extension of the street railway lines across the river and the operation of a belt line to pass northward on the east side of the river, and crossing the new Auburn dam, connect with the George street line. This would bring Nicholls Park, as Jackson Park is now, in direct touch with railway accommodation.

The north and south of the city, west of the river, are pretty well served, in the middle of the railway, but the east is entirely neglected. The city has not been unreasonably severe in exacting from the railway, the fulfilment of the extension conditions of its franchise and the provision of the bridge in question besides serving other very desirable purposes, would have no excuse. It does not seem unreasonable that the proposal of an overhead bridge should receive serious attention from the authorities as the beginning of a serious attempt to bring about advanced conditions in Peterborough.

NEGOTIATIONS NOW ON.

Hon G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, at Newmarket a few days ago, said:

I believe that if the United States is prepared to give us something that is for the benefit of Canada we are prepared to deal with her. But the United States need not expect that Canada in her present position with her strong standing in the Empire, is going to submit or give anything for which she will not get equal value for her own people."

The party accurately expresses the attitude of the Canadian government towards reciprocity with the United States. It should modify the feeling of those who are declaring against reciprocity in any event. This is an illogical position, for everybody recognizes that enlarged facilities of trade with our neighbours, or any other peoples, would be advantageous to Canada. The only point to be guarded is to provide that any treaty shall be fair to Canada, and give us a position that will be to our advantages. We want no arrangement that will not be a direct benefit to Canada. We shall soon have some definite hint of what our neighbours are prepared to demand and give as the price of reciprocity, and soon know whether or not we shall be able to continue negotiations for a treaty, with the prospect, which must be a condition, of this country obtaining something of advantage. The first sittings of the United States and Canadian commissioners is now on at Ottawa.

THE HUMOUR OF PUNCH.

(Toornto News.)

England is full of institutions all eminently characteristic of the English people but it is doubtful if there is any that is more so than Punch. Punch is the very embodiment of the English personality. The humour of it is never boisterous or violent it is always quiet and deliberate. One never shouts over its jokes, or feels a desire to laugh uproariously, but it conduces to many a chuckle of pure amusement. Punch never relies on horse-play for the ludicrous, it is content to gain its ends by more legitimate means. It is seldom bitter in its satire, it is rather content to point out the ridiculous in a situation or to hit the unsophisticated in the eye. Running right through it we can see the quiet irony of English humour when he is confronted by any bizarre situation, and we can see the typical old Englishman, sitting before his grate fire with a glass and a pipe and very quietly opening his Punch for a few moments of real enjoyment. On grows weary of the forced humour of many American publications, and there is a distressing sameness running through them all. American humour is too full of the dramatic and the sensational, too

Unusual Activity In Canadian Pulp And Paper Industries

(Monetary Times.)

Negotiations are being carried on by the Lake Superior Corporation with a syndicate of American publishers, with a view to the establishment of Sault Ste Marie of a paper manufacturing plant to cost $4,000,000.

The Wayagamack Pulp and Paper Company has been incorporated with authorized capital of $5,000,000, and a large pulp and paper mill may consequently be erected at Three Rivers.

Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann propose to build a $10,000,000 pulp and paper manufacturing plant near Lake St. John, Quebec.

Messrs. Price Brothers, Limited, Quebec, propose to enlarge their pulp, paper and lumbering industries.

There is considerable activity in Canadian pulp and paper spheres. This is the more interesting in view of the fact that members of the Washington tariff board, now dealing with the subject of Canadian reciprocity, are making special investigations in regard to wood pulp, pulp wood and print paper. Their first report to the president will probably be on this subject.

Pulpwood Situation in Quebec.

The action of the government of the province of Quebec in prohibiting the exportation of pulpwood cut on its crown lands taken up from and after September 1, 1910, will not have the effect of reducing the quantity of pulpwood for export for years to come and perhaps never, according to Consul-General Willrich of Quebec, who has made a report on the subject to his government. Consul Willrich reached this conclusion after a careful study of the pulpwood situation in Quebec. The conclusion, he says, would not be justified if settlers' lands located on previous to September 1, 1910, could have been made subject to the restriction, but that cannot be done for legal and other reasons. To deprive such settlers of their lands, he says, is not practicable, and is not even contemplated.

New Company Will Build Mill.

The Yayagamack Pulp and Paper Company, which has just been incorporated with an authorized capital of $5,000,000, is being organized by Messrs Rodolphe Forget, A N Greenshields, and other Montreal capitalists, will have an authorized bond issue of $5,000,000. Of this amount $3,000,000 has been underwritten, and the balance will be reserved to provide for future requirements.

It is proposed to construct and operate a large pulp and paper mill at Three Rivers. The company will take over what are known as the Baptist timber limits situated on the St. Maurice River and its tributaries. The mill will be constructed on what is known as Baptist Island at Three Rivers. Mill buildings be designed for a daily capacity of 100 tons. The machinery will be installed in two units of 50 tons each.

Another Mill at Lake St. John.

The Canadian Power and Paper Company, capitalized at $10,000,000 with headquarters in Toronto, was incorporated in August to carry on in all branches the business of manufacturers and dealers in pulp and paper. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are interested in this company, which is generally believed to have the backing of English capital. Work may commence on a mill near Lake St. John early next spring.

A bond flotation will shortly be made in London on behalf of Messrs. Price Brothers, Limited, of Quebec, in connection with the enlargement of their pulp, paper and lumbering industries. This company have 107,000 acres of freehold or seigniory lands, while the limit operated by them under license schedule embraces more than 6,000 square miles. The company operates ten mills.

American Interest in the Subject.

American paper manufacturers are devoting attention to Canadian timber proposals, and are investing in these chiefly in Quebec province. This is the result of the legislation recently enacted by Sir Lomer Gouin in regard to the cutting of pulpwood on Crown Lands in Quebec. Altogether, the outlook is bright for the development of the paper and lumbering industries in that province. It is more profitable to have the raw material manufactured here than to export it in its raw state. Exported as raw material, a cord of pulpwood brings $6, manufactured into paper it would bring from $36 to $38. In addition, the manufacturer of it gives employment to a large number of men.

Some particulars of the negotiations being carried on by the Lake Superior Corporation with an American publishing syndicate appeared in last week's Monetary Times. It is thought that the syndicate will cooperate with the Lake Superior Corporation in the construction of a paper plant at Sault Ste. Marie.

The imports to Canada from the United States of paper and its manufactures last year were valued at $3,224,510, compared with $2,892,905 the previous year. Canada exported to the United States various products last year valued at $1,379,541. The Dominion sold to the United States last year wood and manufactures valued at $10,916,582.

It is interesting to note that the estimate of standing timber in British Columbia is 300 billion feet. The yearly requirements of the United States is 100 billion feet.

May Be Drowned.

Kingston, Nov 7.—Two brothers named Steele, living at Milhaven, cannot be located, and grave fears are held that they may have been drowned in the heavy gale which raged on the lake last Tuesday and Wednesday. The young men were engaged in fishing, and went out in a boat on the day in question.

Stole Case of Shoes.

Kingston, Nov 7.—John Gunn, well-known in police circles has been arrested and committed for trial, accused of stealing a case of shoes from the Midland Shoe Co. Boots hidden in the yard led to his arrest.

PATIENCE IS NECESSARY.

(Toronto Star.)

Greater progress has been made in Imperial ideas under Sir Wilfrid Laurier than under any of his predecessors. The establishment of a tariff preference, the sending of Canadian contingents to South Africa the formation of a Canadian navy, represented new and important departures. It is well recognized that French Canada is not animated of Imperialism in any form, and is hostile to militant Imperialism. To Sir Wilfrid Laurier was assigned the task of reconciling the opinion of Quebec with that of the rest of Canada. He has done much, more we believe than could have been accomplished by any other living Canadian. His services may be compared with that of Cartier in bringing Quebec into line with the movement for Confederation.

If we may judge by Drummond and Arthabaska, Quebec is not reconciled to the naval policy of the Government. Quebec believes that Imperialism is marching too fast, and it strives to check its progress. The divergence of opinion between Quebec and the rest of the Dominion creates a problem, but does not justify the alarm of a racial war. The only way to deal with the situation is the Laurier way of persuasion. We cannot declare war upon French-Canadians because they express the noble Liberal press opinions at the polls different from the prevailing opinions of the rest of Canada. Education, conciliation persuasion, are the only methods of progress in a free, civilized country.

The federation of the British Empire seems now likely to be the subject of a practical proposal. The problems of a federated Empire will be much the same as the problems of a federated Canada. Many creeds and races will be represented, and much heed will have to be paid to local opinion. No part of the Empire, however important, will be able to enforce its opinions in a high-handed way. Toleration, compromise, patience, will be absolutely necessary to solve the problems of Imperial statesmanship, as they are absolutely necessary to solve the problems of Canada.

Entire Fleet Frozen Up.

Selkirk, Man., Nov 7. The sudden drop in temperature and freezing over of the Red River is causing anxiety among the fish and lumber companies here. The entire fleet of steamers, tugs and fishing boats are still on Lake Winnipeg, unable to reach their winter quarters at Selkirk. The Government tugs Victoria and Hector will endeavor to open the river to-day to allow the fleet to enter.

Canada Resents Imputation.

London, Nov 7 Henry Vivian, M P., when interviewed, stated that he had been asked to deliver a message from Canada, which strongly protested against the imputation that her loyalty would be in jeopardy unless tariff reform on a preference basis were adopted.

Examined the Pope's Eyes.

Rome, Nov. 7.—The Pope's eyes were examined Saturday by his optician, P K Cahill of Dublin, and the tests indicated that the pontiff's sight had changed very little since the last examination, in 1903. Mr Cahill presented the Pope with an elaborate barometer.

WAS TERRIBLY AFFLICTED WITH LAME BACK.

COULD NOT SWEEP FLOOR.

Three Boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

It is hard to do housework with a weak and aching back.

Backache comes from sick kidneys, and what a lot of trouble sick kidneys cause.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. N. Lamour, Smith's Falls, Ont., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back and was so bad I could not even sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and with the greatest benefit. I only used three boxes and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Great White Throne and Its Blessings

Immense Audience in the World's Largest Auditorium

London, Eng., Nov. 6.—Pastor Russell of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, preached here today. Royal Albert Hall held a vast audience of deeply interested hearers. The speaker chose his text from Revelation xx. 11:

"I saw a great White Throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them." He said:

Sin made moral cowards of our race. From early infancy fear and apprehension, especially in respect to things future, have been impressed upon us. We realize our imperfection, and that our God is perfect, and that perfection is the only standard which he could approve, and that some kind of punishment for sin must be expected. The Adversary, taking advantage of our forefathers, misrepresented the Almighty and has used our fears to alienate us from him and to wrest and distort his message to us in the Bible. St. Paul assures us that this is Satan's general procedure, that he puts light for darkness and darkness for light. Thus it comes that our text, which is really one of the most beautiful and comforting in the whole Bible when rightly understood, has to many become a lash in the hands of their fears.

It is needless to say that our text is one of the symbolisms of a Book filled with symbols. God's people, guided by his holy Spirit, in due time will appreciate these symbols. For many of them the due time is already here. The Throne is Messiah's. It represents his Mediatorial Dominion of earth for a thousand years. Its whiteness symbolizes the purity, the justice, of his Kingdom of righteousness under the whole heavens. The heavens and earth which will flee away from the presence of the great Emmanuel will not be the heavens of God's Throne, nor the earth which he has given to the children of men. The heavens and earth which will flee away, and for which no place will be found, are, of course, the symbolical ones. In Bible symbology the earth represents established civilization; the sea represents the restless, dissatisfied masses of humanity. The mountains symbolize human governments, kingdoms, which constitute the backbone of present spiritual influences—Ecclesiasticism, Churchianity. Thus interpreted our text declares that when Messiah shall assume control of the world; when he shall sit upon his Throne, when he shall exercise rulership amongst men, the result will be that the social system of to-day, as well as the present day ecclesiasticism, will flee away, will pass out of existence—no place will be found for them.

Some man may be inclined to ask, Has not Christ been the great Ruler of the world for these past nineteen centuries? And whatever may be said of the four thousand years before the coming of Christ may it not be claimed that he has been reigning ever since his ascension to the right hand of the Father? We answer that if this be true, if the Redeemer of men has been reigning as the King of earth for these nineteen centuries, there should be something in the Bible to so teach. But we find nothing. On the contrary, we hearken to the Master's own words telling us that Satan is the Prince of this age (John xiv. 30). We hearken to him again telling us, "My Kingdom is not of this world (age)" (John xviii. 36). Again he says, "I will come again and receive you unto myself" (John xiv. 3). Again he tells us that he went into a far country to receive the title to his Kingdom, then to return to take possession of it (Matthew xxi. 33; xxv. 14), and that at his second coming he will be the great King of glory. He tells us the same thing in Matthew xxv. 31, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."

On the other hand, as we scan the pages of history during the past eighteen centuries, we are convinced that Messiah has not been the King of the world. To think of him as such, with the omnipotent power which we accredit to him, would be to charge him with responsibility for bloody and atrocious persecutions and wars and famines and pestilences. Surely no right-minded person, after mature consideration, can rationally accept the theory that the glorious Messiah's reign of righteousness for the blessing of the whole earth, the uplifting of the whole race, the enlightenment of every creature, and the bringing of all possible into accord with God—none of us could think that that reign of the great Mediator between God and men is in the past. We must agree with our text that it is in the future, and that, when established, its effect upon the institutions of the present—political, social, financial, religious—will be such that they will flee away, no place even more will be found for them. Not from this standpoint that is hope, but from no other standpoint. We are living today at the very climax of civilization. Not today we behold more clearly than ever before that the deeply-ingrained selfishness of humanity is a blight upon all the blessings and conveniences and advantages of our day.

I need not do more than remind you that selfishness is to be found in every one of us, and that a semblance of righteousness is insisted upon by us all and adhered to, and violators of it are called criminals. Nevertheless it seems impossible to legislate equity, justice. The keen intellects of men find opportunities for circumventing the laws and for committing theft and murder and sin in the face of laws and without danger of being punished.

Let us illustrate this: We have heard of the famines of India and how the British Government has spent millions of "Pounds Sterling" for irrigation purposes to compensate for irregularities in the rainfall. Undoubtedly famines are to some extent due to water scarcity. Nevertheless, one of the ablest of our engineers informs the world that there has not been in fifty years such a scarcity as should have created the famines. The famines in India, which have cost the lives of millions, are to be accredited to greed—selfishness which has flourished under the shadow of the law. Wealthy milling concerns purchase the rice from the natives and grind it into flour. By agreement between themselves they do not compete, but press the market price of rice lower and lower until the poor native, unable to make a profit, declines to plant, care for and harvest the crop. As a result there is famine. The poor natives suffer; but the managers of the milling properties pay large dividends of from fifty to one hundred and fifty per cent. on invested capital to the wealthy owning them.

As an illustration of the exorbitant profits I will relate a case. Two young men whose accumulated savings amounted to thirty thousand rupees (about two thousand pounds, or ten thousand dollars) invested it in rice-milling. Their profits for the first year were eighty thousand rupees —about five thousand pounds, or twenty-five thousand dollars. They were not in the combine to depress the price of rice, but they profited by what the combine accomplished. These inequities of our present social order are beyond the reach and correction of the comparatively few men of ability not directly or indirectly interested in them.

Neither Jehovah nor his great Representative, Messiah, can in any sense or degree be a party to injustice or inequity. The fact that injustice has been permitted, and that inequity has been the rule for centuries, is to be accounted for by the other fact that during all this period the world has been under the reign of sin and death, and not under the reign of righteousness and life; it has been under the reign of Satan, "the Prince of this world" and of the darkness of selfishness and evil—all of which his name represents—and not under the dominion of Messiah, the Representative of Jehovah, and his righteousness, not under the King of glory, the anti-typical David and Solomon, the anti-typical Aaron and Melchisedec. The New Dispensation which Messiah's Kingdom will usher in is pictured in our text. It will be the dominion that will be world-wide —pure, holy, righteous, just, truthful, God-like; a great White Throne. No wonder we read that the symbolical heavens and earth, representing the old order of things—social, ecclesiastical—will all vanish away.

But let no one think for a moment that ecclesiastical princes, financial princes and political princes will voluntarily acknowledge that the hour has come for a full surrender to Messiah and to all the principles of his absolute righteousness. On the contrary, these privileged members of our race will more and more be drawn together for mutual protection for the preservation of the special privileges which have come into their possession. Even now we see the prophecy of the Second Psalm fulfilling. We are in the very time when the Lord, through the Prophet David, calls the great ones of the earth to recognize the true situation of our wonderful day that it means that the Day of Messiah has arrived, and that he should be recognized and his principles of righteousness obeyed.

The call is recognized, Salute the Son, O ye kings of the earth, while ye are in the way with him, before his anger be kindled and ye perish by the way (Psalms ii. 10-12). But no, the prophecy declares that we are in the day when the people, the masses, will have foolish imaginations—when they will think that by their own strength they can inaugurate a reign of Socialism or by anarchy. The people must learn that their help is in the Lord and not in their own frail arm. The people must see the force of the statement, "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Messiah" (verse 12). The Lord is about to establish the great White Throne of absolute justice in the world.

On the other hand, the money kings and earthly rulers and ecclesiastical princes are taking counsel together today for the preservation of the present inequities of the world, by which they are profiting. The Lord declares that in this they are leading themselves against him and against the newly-appointed King, Messiah. For over a century human liberty has been making progress, in spite of every endeavor to restrain it. The potentates of earth perceive the rising tide of human intelligence and demands for equal rights. They perceive that unless something be done to counteract this general movement the special privileges of the privileged classes will disappear. They are even now taking counsel together how the restraints which the people are putting upon them may be broken and a reign of—ecclesiastical, financial and religious—be re-inaugurated; a reign such as prevailed centuries ago, but now upon a higher plane, controlled by brighter wits, holding under restraint more intelligent masses.

Would that the cultured and influential princes of earth could take the proper view of the situation and realize the fallacy of their counsels, the impossibility of averting the great changes which are upon us by reason of the time having come for Messiah to take unto himself his great power and reign! Hearken to the Lord's words through the Prophet, "Be wise, now, therefore, O ye kings: Be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling. Do homage to the Son" (vs. 10-12). Could the wise of the earth realize the situation and fully submit themselves to the Divine requirements of absolute justice and truth, what a blessing it would be to the world! If these princes would turn their attention from the grasping of power and money to the enlightenment and uplifting of the people they would become ministers, servants, of the New Dispensation, which would be ushered in with rejoicing. But the Lord informs us that this will not be the case and that, as a result, Messiah's Kingdom will be ushered in by "a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation" (Daniel xii. 1). The Psalmist tells us the same—God will have in derision the puny efforts of the worldly-wise and great to re-establish autocracy. He will speak to them in his wrath the lesson which they refuse to hear by loving exhortation. The new King and his Empire will be established in the earth, and the declaration is that amidst such Divine displeasure he shall "break them with a rod of iron and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel" (Psalm ii. 4-9; Revelation ii. 27).

God is no respecter of persons. Hence, before his Judgment Throne punishments will be meted out to the little, as well as to the great, when found to be violators of the principles of justice. Would that I could impress this upon many of the lower classes who are crying out against the injustices in high places while practicing similar injustices themselves. Let it be remembered also that the great White Throne speaks blessings, Divine favor and uplifting to all who love righteousness and hate iniquity—the little and the great.

If in the past a certain retributive justice has seemed to proceed along national lines, blessing the nations which take the more righteous course, and frowning upon those which take the more evil course, this will no longer be the case in the not distant future. The testing imposed by Messiah's Kingdom will be along individual lines. He that eats the sour grape of sin will find his teeth on edge, and his alone. "Justice will be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet," and all the refuges of lies, by which mankind in high places have sought to fool themselves and others, will be swept away. The hidden things of darkness will be brought to light and the glorious things of light will be everywhere recognized. Ultimately "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" to the enthroned Messiah.

The Master said, "My Word shall judge you in the last day." Happy has it been for the comparatively few who have heard the Master's Word in this present life, and have judged themselves thereby, and submitted themselves to his righteous precepts! These blessed ones will share with Messiah the glories of his Spiritual Empire, invisible to men. But during the Thousand-Year Judgment Day of the world (II. Peter iii. 7, 8) the same words—the "wonderful words of life" to those who will obey, and words of death to those who will refuse obedience—will be the standards of justice for all mankind. The books then to be opened to all will include, not only the words of the Master and of the Apostles of the New Testament, but also the Divine message through the Prophets of old. Then all shall see the oneness and harmony of the Divine message of righteousness. According to those standards each who would have eternal life must conform his living and his thinking. The approved, at the end of Messiah's reign, will be delivered over to the Father perfect as human beings. The disapproved will be destroyed in the Second Death —without hope (II. Peter ii. 12; Jude 12; Acts iii. 23).

Another book of life will be opened —another besides the one that is now open, which is styled the Lamb's Book of Life, and in which is written the names of his faithful followers of the present time—"members of his Body," "the Royal Priesthood," "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife." The new book of life will be for those who will be on trial during Messiah's reign. By its close it will include all of Adam's race found worthy of eternal life.

The judgment of the Church in the present time is not according to works, the perfection of which, under present conditions, would be impossible. Hence the Church's judgment is according to faith and the obedience of faith possible. But the world's judgment will be according to works, for the knowledge then will be so great that faith will no longer be at a premium. The great Mediator will accept of imperfect works according to the ability of the people; but, as they rise out of degradation, more and more will be required of them until in the end they will be perfected and absolute perfection of works will be required.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By L. Phillips Oppenheim.)

For several minutes Ray proceeded with his dinner. I did my best to follow his example, but my appetite was gone. I could scarcely persuade myself that the whole affair was not a dream—that the men who sat all round us in little groups, the dark liveried servants passing noiselessly backwards and forwards, were not figures in some shadowy nightmare, and that I should not wake in a moment to find myself curled up in a railway carriage on my way home. But there was no mistaking the visible presence of Colonel Mostyn Ray. Strong, stalwart, he sat within a few feet of me, calmly eating his dinner as though my agony were a thing of little account. He, at least, was real.

"This woman," he continued presently, "either is, or would like to be, mixed up with the treachery that is somewhere close upon us. Sooner or later she will approach you. You are warned."

"Yes," I repeated vaguely. "I am warned."

"I have finished," Colonel Ray remarked. "Go on with your dinner and think. I will answer any question presently."

"Is he—my father—alive now?" I asked.

"I have reason to believe," Ray answered, "that he may be dead."

"How is it," I asked, "that you are so well acquainted with these things? Were you at any time my father's friend?"

"I was acquainted with him," Ray answered. "We were at one time in the same regiment. My friendship was with your mother."

The answer was illuming, but he never winced.

"Indirectly," I said, "I seem to have a good deal to thank you for. Why do you say that you can never be my friend?"

"You are your father's son," he answered curtly.

"I am also my mother's son," I objected.

"For which reason," he said, "I have done what I could to give you a start in life."

And with these words he dismissed me.

* * * * * * *

I received Ray's warning concerning Mrs. Smith-Lessing, the new tenant of Brasted Grange, somewhere between seven and eight o'clock, and barely an hour later I found myself alone in a first-class carriage with her, and a four-hours' journey before us. She had arrived at King's Cross apparently only a few minutes before the departure of the train, for the platform was almost deserted when I took my seat. Just as I had changed my hat for a cap, however, wrapped my rug around my knees, and settled down for the journey, the door of my carriage was thrown open, and I saw two women looking in, one of whom I recognized at once. Mrs. Smith-Lessing, although the night was warm, was wearing a heavy and magnificent fur coat, and the guard of the train himself was attending her. Behind stood a plainly-dressed woman, evidently her maid, carrying a flat dressing-case. There was a brief colloquy between the three. It ended in dressing-case, a pile of books, a reading-lamp, and a formidable array of hat-boxes, and milliners' parcels being placed upon the rack and vacant seats in my compartment, and immediately afterwards Mrs. Smith-Lessing herself entered. I heard her tell her maid to enter the carriage behind. The door was closed and the guard touched off his hat. A minute later and we were off.

I was alone with the adventuress. I had no doubt but that she had chosen my carriage with intent. I placed my dispatch-box on the rack above my head, and opened out a newspaper, which I had no intention of reading. She, for her part, arranged her travelling light and took out a novel. She did not apparently even glance in my direction, and seemed to become immersed at once in her reading. So we travelled for half an hour or so.

At the end of that time I was suddenly conscious that she had lain down her book, and was regarding me through partially-closed eyes. I, too, laid down my paper. Our eyes met, and she smiled.

"Forgive me," she said, "but did I not see you one day last week upon the sands at Brasted with Lady Angela Harberly?"

"I believe so," I answered. "You were riding, I think, with her brother."

"How fortunate that I should find myself travelling with a neighbour!" she murmured. "I rather dreaded this night journey. I just missed the six o'clock and I have been at the station ever since."

I understood at once one of the charms of this woman. Her voice was deliciously soft and musical. The words seemed to leave her lips slowly, almost lingeringly, and she spoke with the precision and slight accent of a well-educated foreigner. Her eyes seemed to be wandering all over me and my possessions, yet her interest, if it amounted to that, never even suggested curiosity or inquisitiveness.

"It is scarcely a pleasant journey at this time of night," I remarked.

"Indeed, no," she assented. "I wonder if you know my name? I am Mrs. Smith-Lessing, of Brasted Grange. And you?"

"My name is Guy Ducaine," I told her. "I live at a small cottage called the 'Brand.'"

"That charming little place you can just see from the sands?" she exclaimed. "I thought the Duke's head keeper lived there."

"It was a keeper's lodge before the Duke was kind enough to let it to me," I told her.

She nodded.

"It is a very delightful abode," she murmured.

She picked up her book and, after turning over the pages aimlessly for a few minutes, she recommenced to read. I followed her example; but when a little later on I glanced across in her direction, I found that her eyes were fixed upon me, and that her novel lay in her lap.

"My book is so stupid," she said apologetically. "I find, Mr. Ducaine" she added with sudden earnestness, "the elements of a much stranger story closer at hand."

"That," I remarked, laying down my own book, and looking steadily at her, "sounds enigmatic."

"I think," she said, "that I am very foolish to talk to you at all about it. If you know who I am, you are probably armed against me at all points. You will weigh and measure my words, you will say to yourself: 'Lies, lies, lies!' You will not believe in me or anything I say. And, again, if you do not know, the story is too painful a one for me to tell."

"Then let us both avoid it," I said, reaching again for my paper. "We shall stop at Ipswich in an hour. I will change carriages there."

She turned round in her seat towards the window, as though to hide her face. My own attempt at reading was a farce. She was looking out into the darkness, and she seemed to me to be crying. Every now and then her shoulders heaved convulsively. Suddenly she faced me once more. There were traces of tears on her face; a small lace handkerchief was knotted up in her nervous fingers.

"Oh, I cannot," she exclaimed plaintively. "I cannot sit here alone with you and say nothing. I know that I am judged already. It does not matter. I am your father's wife, Guy. You owe me at least some recognition of that fact."

"I never knew my father," I said, "except as the cause of my own miserable upbringing and friendless life."

"You never knew him," she answered, "and therefore you believe the worst. He was weak, perhaps, and, exposed to a terrible temptation, he fell. But he was not a bad man. He was never that."

"Do you think, Mrs. Smith-Lessing," I said, struggling to keep my voice firm, though I felt myself trembling, "that this is a profitable discussion for either of us?"

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I WONDER if women, as a rule, realize how intensely and consistently most men hate perfume.

I was speaking of the way in which men who smoke leave the taint of their habit upon you, if they so much as shake your hand.

"I rather like the smell of fresh tobacco smoke," I said, "but the stale odour that smoking leaves on hangings and draperies, and that clings around most men who smoke a great deal, I hate. Why, if you dance with such a man or shake hands with him you can smell that stale odour on yourself the rest of the evening."

"Is it any worse than the way women discriminate the odour of perfumery?" demanded the other party to the discussion.

As a proof of his disinterestedness in the argument, let me mention that the other party does not smoke at all.

"No nice woman uses perfumery," I protested.

"Yes, they do," he insisted. "Well, maybe not strong perfumery, but some kind of scent. My mother, now, insists she doesn't use perfumery, but her handkerchief always has some kind of an odour."

"Why, that's because she keeps them in a sachet," I explained, "almost everyone does that."

"Exactly," said the other party, "that's what I mean. I don't know whether the smell is wet or dry, whether it comes out of a bottle or through a cloth, but it's there, and you can't dance with most girls without smelling it on your hands, and I don't like it, and neither do most men."

That's a new point of view to me.

Of course, I always knew that the use of any strong perfume was extremely bad form.

I dislike, as much as any man, to sit next a woman on the tram or car who has drenched her handkerchief in some strong toilet water before sallying forth to conquest.

But I had never thought that the placing of sachets in one's clean linen was any other than a dainty habit.

Perhaps the other party had an obsession on the subject? Perhaps he is particularly sensitive to odour?

I can't say for sure. All I know is that he very warmly resented this hypothesis when I suggested it, and that other men whom I have since consulted, hold similar views to his.

Already I can picture to myself the letter I am going to receive from the aggressive person.

She is going to say, "You needn't think we are going to stop using sachets just because men don't like them. There are some women who don't think about what men like all the time."

Right-O, aggressive young person.

But this isn't a command to stop using sachets. It's just a presentation of a point of view that was new and interesting to me, and that I thought might be the same to other women.

Good Fellowship Guild Has Enjoyable Programme An Interesting Session

Variety was given to the Rev. W. C. Carpenter's Sunday afternoon meeting of the League of Goodfellowship, yesterday, when a very large number of men attended the Princess theatre and enjoyed a happy musical hour.

The hymns were sung most heartily, and the other musical items were much appreciated. The Rev. C. Carpenter prefaced each hymn with remarks as to its authorship and the circumstances connected with its composition.

He spoke of the good done by gospel singing, as shown by the success of such combinations as Moody and Sankey, of Crossley and Hunter and others. That men who cared little for the gospel meeting, when preached, used to hear it sung, and many would look back to the little quiet Sunday-evening "sing-songs" by the cosy fireside in the dear old home. He said that the power to sing was given by God, that it might be devoted to His service, and prayer and thanksgiving, when put into song, would uplift the human heart, if we enter into the spirit of the words we sing.

In his prelude to the hymns he mentioned that "Lead Kindly Light" was composed by Newman about 1833, before he went over to the Church of Rome, and its beauty was such, that perhaps, its influence on the hearts of men had been greater than that of any other hymn. "They were ninety and nine," Moody and Sankey were travelling to Glasgow when Moody asked Sankey if he had a hymn to fit in with the subject of "The Good Shepherd." Sankey replied that he had some words, but no tune, and immediately set to work, and composed a tune on the train, and the result is, this touching hymn, as it known today. "Nearer My God to Thee" was written by Mrs. Adams, a Unitarian, and he pointed out that while not mentioning the name of Jesus Christ it breathed His spirit.

"Jesus, Lover of My Soul" was said to have been suggested to the writer, Chas. Wesley, by a small bird flying in at his window, and taking refuge in his bosom, during the raging of a great storm. He told a story of how the words, "cover my defenceless head" saved the life of a sentinel on outpost duty, during the American Civil war. An enemy had crept up in the darkness and had, unknown to the sentinel, covered him with his rifle, when this murmured prayer came to his ears, and he retired, feeling that God was protecting his enemy.

"Rock of Ages," Topladey, the author of this hymn, was that rare combination, thorough poet and thorough musician, who was converted at the age of 16, by hearing some rough, uneducated man preaching in an Irish barn. This hymn was the favourite one of the late Prince Consort, who at the end of his life said, that worldly honours left him poor, but trust in the "Rock of Ages" made him rich.

During the afternoon Mr. A. C. Black sang "A little child shall lead them," and Fortes "Good Eve". Mr. Morphet sang "The Holy City" and a few effective orchestra under the leadership of Mr. Halpenny was a great factor in an afternoon of thorough enjoyment.

In conclusion the reverend gentleman thanked all who had taken part and extended a hearty invitation to the men of the city to attend the meetings in the Princess theatre, and also to visit the club at 161 Antrim street, are evening from 7 to 10 p.m.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The paper chase, held Saturday afternoon, was a great success, and furnished some exciting sport for the large number that turned out; the trail was laid by Physical Director Thompson and Arthur Flowers from the east side of Smith street bridge, northeast across the fields, over the swamps, and turned south east, through East City, until the river was reached. The hounds by this time were getting dangerously close, so the hares took to the river, fording it just below the Cereal dam, knee deep, in the cold water. From here the hares made their way back to the building, just arriving in time to stall off the leading hounds of the pack. It was enjoyed so much by all who were out that they have asked for another next week, and if you missed it last week be sure and get out with the hares and hounds Saturday next.

The swimming classes will open tonight at 8.45, when advanced swimming will be taken up by Mr. W. O. Taylor. If you wish to learn some new strokes come along. Wednesday night, at 8.45, the beginners' swimming class will open. If you cannot swim, this is your chance to learn.

In the Junior Basketball League three very fast games were played on Saturday. The Tigers defeated the Cubs, 6 to 0; Athletics defeated Midgets 4 to 2. Beavers defeated the Maples 10 to 4.

In the Senior League the Moonshiners defeated the Highlanders. Score 8 to 4.

"ASTRONOMY OF TO-DAY," SUBJECT OF A VERY INTERESTING ADDRESS

Prof. De Lury, of Toronto University, Speaks Before Local Branch of Royal Astronomical Society---Presentation to the Peterborough Section of a Modern Telescope by Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P.

The first of the fall and winter meetings of the Peterborough branch of the Royal Astronomical Society was held in the Assembly hall of the Collegiate Institute on Saturday evening. The attendance was fairly large, although the fact of it being Saturday night no doubt deterred many from availing themselves of hearing a splendid and scholarly address on Astronomy, particularly of the present day by Prof. D. Lury, of Toronto University. Another pleasing feature of the evening's proceedings was the presentation by Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., to the local section of the Society, of a large telescope, as a means of stimulating interest in the work that the Peterborough branch is carrying on. The instrument is a very excellent one, and will be of great assistance to the members.

The chair was taken by the president, Mr. H. B. Cottier, and in a few introductory remarks he called upon Rev. Dr. Marsh to speak, he (the deponent) having to leave on the nine o'clock train for Port Hope. Dr. Marsh, in coming forward, stated that being Saturday night many business men who had been desirous of being present, were prevented from coming on that account. However, the interest in the work of the Society must not be judged by numbers. During the summer months the members had been very active. The Society had been the means of entertaining a scientific party and the interest was steadily on the increase. He spoke of the fact that once in the early summer a large party of young people came out from the city to his place in automobiles, in buggies and on bicycles, at half past nine in the morning, for the purpose of seeing the sunset, which they did not see, as it was a cloudy night. But it was an evidence of the growing interest.

The Presentation.

Mr. Stratton on being called to the platform, said he was glad to be present among such high-minded persons as students of astronomy. It always, he said, gave him great pleasure to do anything that would help an organization, which, like the Royal Astronomical Society of Peterborough was so progressive and up-to-date. We are all, at times, "up in the air," but not in an astronomical sense. We did not get as far as the sun, the moon, or the stars. Like most people he had at all hours of the day and night witnessed the reflection of the sun, moon, and stars, but he must admit that he was unable to talk to the members of the Society in a manner he would like. Astronomy was a most interesting and attractive study for any amateur, he had not as much knowledge on the subject as wish to possess of a study which, in a general way was so beneficial and had so important a bearing upon human progress. To study the stars and great bodies of the Heavens to a scientific mind is the acquirement of vision, such he felt that his object in purchasing and donating the instrument to the Society could take no better form, especially as regards the Astronomical Society, than to place at the disposal of the Society, what he was told was a good telescope, which he had much pleasure in formally presenting to the Society. He did so with the earnest wish that his aim and expectation in regard to its influence would be fully realized, and with the hope that the members of the society looking up through it, the stars will look down upon the Society, flourishing and growing, as well numerically as in the acquisition of helpful knowledge.

Mr. Stratton's remarks were greeted with applause and Mr. Cottier, on behalf of the Society, spoke of its sincere appreciation of Mr. Stratton's munificence. This presentation he said, was an evidence of a practical interest in the Society. It was all very well to hear lectures on Astronomy, but the real interest was when one was looking through an instrument at the heavenly bodies. He thanked the kind donor most heartily.

Mr. T. A. S. Hay, on moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Stratton, said that the Society heretofore had been living on the generosity of the Government, as far as the supplying of telescopes were concerned, but now, through the kind thoughtfulness of Mr. Stratton a great advance had been taken. He hoped his worthy example would be followed by others.

Mr. D. Walker, in seconding the motion said that Mr. Stratton never lost chances to help others on this occasion he had shown his interest in the Society in a very practical manner. It gave him much pleasure to second the vote of thanks.

Dr. Marsh in referring to the telescope exhibited, Mr. Stratton had presented was the very best procurable. Its definition was perfect and compared the very best glasses seen. It was especially good for observation of sun spots and protuberances.

Prof. De Lury's Address.

Prof. D. Lury, the speaker of the evening, was next introduced. He was glad to avail himself of the invitation to be present. He was glad to see here so many ladies present. The Society was making very rapid progress. Toronto [illegible] Winnipeg [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] and the one here was formed through the efforts of Mr. Marsh. He spoke of the Society and at Toronto [illegible] they had in helping on the work. He was glad to know that the characteristic patriotic spirit of Hon. Mr. Stratton had shown itself in such a splendid way. The instrument which he had presented, was perfect in construction, and an excellent one in every detail. It would be a great benefit to the work, and [illegible] Stratton, he wanted to thank Mr. Stratton on behalf of the entire Society. He was pleased to know and appreciated the fact that the Astronomical Society had Mr. Stratton's good will.

Coming to his subject, Prof. De Lury stated that he wanted to speak on the questions of Astronomy of to-day. When one recalled the progress that has been made in the past few years, it was a matter of surprise to the extent the science of Astronomy had advanced. When one recalled the progress that was presented to the people a few years ago, and to a great extent the indifference of the questions of to-day. When men began to enquire into the cause of the regularity and succession of events, day after day, of the solution they arrived at was the most natural. It sounds that the earth was the centre of the universe and the [illegible] But as men began to study the matter they found that the earth was only one of a number of bodies that revolved around the sun. The speaker then went on to explain the theory of Copernicus and Galileo, and the latter's discovery of a number of bodies circulating the sun.

The lecture was then concluded and the audience [illegible] shown by Prof. De Lury to the [illegible] of applause.

REV. DR. SYMONDS' SPLENDID SERMON AT ALL SAINTS

Former Rector of St. Luke's Church Gives an Inspiring Message---Sons of England and Members of the Orange Association Attended in a Body.

A large congregation assembled at All Saints' Church yesterday morning to hear Rev. Dr. Symonds, Vicar of Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal. The Sons of England and Orange Association were present in a body to attend the services, both organizations being well represented. They marched to the church and took seats on the south side which had been reserved for them.

Rev. Dr. Symonds spoke from the third chapter of St. Mark, and the 19th verse. And He entered twelve and they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach.

Dr. Symonds described the mode adopted by Jesus in choosing the men He required for His work. He said that there were many characters and temperaments to be considered in choosing men for the ministry. Jesus chose men of all kinds, and from all walks of life. He was not particular as to what was [illegible] and [illegible] that he would have men to be with him because they would have to be with Him. WHAT TAG DAY MEANS

What does Children's Aid Tag Day mean?

You will find out next Saturday, and it is in your power to help give it a very substantial meaning.

But, for fear you may not want to wait till then you are told now, so that you will be prepared.

Children's Aid Tag Day means that the Society coffers are low.

It means that there are nine children in the Shelter now, and many more that should be there, to be fed, warmed, clothed and cared for, and that money is needed for these purposes.

It means that every citizen, especially YOU, is called upon in the interests of society to help save for good citizenship and comfortable, adoptive homes, the children rescued and to be rescued, from homes of cruelty, squalor, dirt, degradation, neglect, and the certainty if not rescued, of growing up criminals, thieves, or prostitutes, or, in any event, a danger, a menace to, and a burden on, society.

Tag Day means that next Saturday, November 12th, 150 bright-faced girls will invade the whole city, "tackle" every citizen, and ask him or her to contribute little or more—preferably more to replenish the funds of the society.

It means that when you make your donation you will have a tag fixed on your person by fair fingers, which will in turn, mean that you are immune from further solicitation.

It also means that if you are anxious for another interview with a charming young lady you may pocket your tag and buy another.

It means that an average contribution of five cents each from 10,000 of the 17,000 persons in the city will mean $500, and an average of ten cents each, $1,000.

Now you know what Children's Aid Tag Day means.

Now you've got the meaning; but that does not mean that you need be mum in expressing your knowledge of its meaning.

Wages Case Was Heard in the Police Court This Morning—Man is Charged With Theft.

A WEEK'S REMAND

A man named Frank Beal, who gives his home as Toronto, blew into town on Friday night and registered at the Grand Hotel. He is said to have taken a coat and vest from there and on Saturday told the proprietor that the board was too high and that he would have to get a cheaper place. He left and registered at the What House, where it is alleged he stock a couple of razors and 65 cents. Some of the stolen goods were recognized in the window of a local second-hand store, and other evidence led up to the arrest of the prisoner. He pleaded not guilty to the charge of having stolen the goods and was remanded for a week. Mr. E. L. Goodwill appeared for the defence.

A local man was fined $2.00 in the Police Court this morning for drinking a little too much of the cup that cheers on Saturday last. He paid his fine.

A wage case was then dispensed with. The plaintiff was Mr. Charles Hunt, who claimed wages to the amount of $16.00, from Mr. E. P. Crosswell, with whom he was employed as a lumberman. Mr. Ernest Crosswell, clerk, was the first witness called. He stated that the plaintiff was hired in Toronto through the Jackson & Co. Employment Agency, and that he professed to be an experienced sawyer, but the foreman said he could not handle the saw.

Mr. Hunt stated that he hired for $22 per month of 26 days, and about the middle of the month he was hurt by a tree falling on him. He said that after he was hurt and unable to work for a few days he was dismissed.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill, who appeared for the defence, then called Mr. Michael Callin, the workman who felled the tree which was supposed to have hurt Mr. Hunt. He said that the tree did not hurt the plaintiff, and gave other evidence somewhat contradictory to that of the plaintiff. When all the expenses on both sides were counted up, his Worship Magistrate Dumble allowed the plaintiff 62 cents, no costs of court being charged. Mr. Crosswell paid over the 62 cents and the Court adjourned.

THOMPSON SETON'S LECTURE WILL BE A GREAT TREAT

Gerald Christy, London, England—By his singular power as an historian of animal life, and the ready skill with which he is enabled to give us pictures of life history of the creatures about whom he writes, Mr. Thompson Seton has made his name familiar to the reading public of both hemispheres.

So graphic are the stories, one ceases to feel that the wolves and dogs of his narratives belong to a different species from ourselves; we are gradually led into the belief that he has rediscovered the primitive instincts that have so much sway over mankind.

We have masses of fiction that centre on the emotions and passions of humanity. We are regaled yearly with myriads of volumes that tell the tragedy and comedy of the daily lives of people in all positions of life, but Mr. Seton has introduced us to a new world. He has shown us that the very animals to whose existence so many of us are just a trifle indifferent, feel in their own peculiar way the responsibilities of living, that they can be as affectionate and self-denying in the rearing of their offspring as many human beings, and that they can face the direst odds with a stoicism beyond our knowledge.

Mr. Seton's books form an eloquent plea for the prevention of those beautiful creatures whose very existence is threatened by the advance of civilized man, and he is also inculcating by his pen, his pencil and his charming lectures, a love for what we comfortably call the lower creation.

In addition to his ability with pen and pencil, Mr Seton is a born story teller, and during the last seven winters has achieved great success as a lecturer in America and England, illustrating his stories with lantern slides.

Mr. Thompson Seton will appear at the Grand next Thursday, Nov. 10, under the auspices of the Peterborough Boy Scouts.

VISIT OF THE GLASGOW SELECT CHOIR TO-MORROW

The Toronto Globe to-day has the following to say of the Glasgow Select Choir, which appears at the Grand Opera House to-morrow night.

The music-loving public of Toronto and particularly those from athe old country, are under a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. William Campbell, the well-known impressrio, for his enterprise in again favouring them with a visit from this well-known body of musicians. It will be remembered that this famous organization appeared in the Massey Hall in September at the beginning of their present tour. They have been hard at it ever since, and far from the voices showing signs of wear, the constant singing together has been instrumental in producing, if it were possible, an even finer blending of the different parts, while the sopranos seem to have acquired an added brilliancy to their upper register.

WHY YOU ARE THIN; HOW TO GET FLESHY

Discusses Causes of Thinness and Gives New Method of Increasing Weight and Rounding Out the Form.

Prescription Accomplishes Wonders.

A treatment which anyone can prepare cheaply at home, has been found to increase the weight, improve the health, round out scrawny figures, improve the hair, brighten the eyes and put new colour into the cheeks and lips of anyone who is too thin and bloodless. It puts flesh on those who have been always thin whether from disease or natural tendency on those who believe eating and diet have no sum to do to increase on those who feel well but can't put a pound on those who have tried every kind of method in vain. It gives a wonderful to digestion, nutrition and assimilation. It assists the blood and nerves to distribute all over the body the flesh elements contained in food, gives the thin person the same plump ing qualities possessed by the naturally fleshy.

Everybody is about the same as to certain elements and organs. If blood and nerves are defective and until the is corrected thin people will stay thin. The nutrition stays on the body and separation by the digestive function instead of passing through unused when the valuable constituents of the medicine is used. Practically no one can remain thin who uses it for it supplies the long felt need.

Mix in a half pint bottle three ounces of essence of pepsin, and three ounces of syrup of rhubarb. Then add one ounce compound essence cardiol. Shake and let stand two hours. Then add one ounce of tincture cardamom compound, two cardamom. Shake well and take a teaspoonful before and after meals. Drink plenty of water between meals and when retiring. Watch before beginning.

OFFERS $50,000 REWARD TO ANY ONE PRODUCING BELLE ELMORE

Dr. Munyon Will Pay Above Sum to Woman Herself if She Will Come Forward — Crippen Will Hang To-morrow.

TO ASK FOR PARDON

London, Nov. 7 Dr. Hawley Crippen, convicted of the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore, the actress, yesterday played his last card and lost. He will be hanged on Nov. 8.

The Criminal Court of Appeals heard his appeal from the conviction of the lower court, and decided against him on all points. The court refused to grant a new trial, and confirmed the order of execution, which will be carried out on Tuesday next.

The hearing of Crippen's appeal drew another great crowd to the new Bailey court yesterday. Justices Darling, Channell and Pickford heard the appeal. Crippen was brought to the court house, but kept in a cell, pending a decision on an appeal against Justice Ridley's ruling that he could not attend the proceedings. This ruling was set aside, and Crippen was brought into the dock. He was very pale and evidently had lost strength since his conviction.

Changed as he was physically, Crippen maintained his composure, even in the trying moment when he heard his doom pronounced, and did not betray himself, if his air was assumed. At once when the court's decision was announced, a warden touched the prisoner on the shoulder and the latter, without a word or gesture, turned and left the dock. He was conducted at once to Pentonville Prison.

Those who have seen Crippen during his imprisonment say that his bearing has never changed from the moment of his arrest. He sleeps throughout the night soundly, and eats heartily. He spends much time in reading.

The prisoner's counsel were the same as appeared for him at his trial. The principal grounds upon which they based their appeal were, first, that one of the jurors had been taken ill during the trial and was removed from the court by physicians without being in the custody of an officer; second, the identity of the corpse found in the cellar of the Crippen home had not been established; and, third, that the crown's rebutting evidence had been improperly admitted.

Solicitor Tobin said that it was not charged that any one had tampered with the juror while she was temporarily excused, but that an important principle of law was involved.

In reply the crown offered the evidence of a bailiff, that the juror was in his charge throughout his illness.

Deciding this point, the court ruled that the temporary separation of the jury did not affect the trial.

Tobin then addressed the court on the next point of appeal, which was that the evidence of Childers, a buyer for Jones Brothers, was wrongfully admitted after the case for the defence had closed. Tobin quoted several cases which bore on the question.

Crippen's attorney have announced that their next step would be to ask the Home Office either to commute the death sentence to life imprisonment, or to grant a pardon to the prisoner. It is considered most unlikely, however, that any power will now intervene to save the prisoner.

Dr. Crippen has made a will in which everything that he owns is to pass to Miss Ethel Claire LeNeve, the young woman who shared his flight for liberty.

It is believed that the estate will total about $15,000. The expenses of the defence will be paid out of a fund raised by unknown parties and which is said to have been ample for the purpose.

Miss Leneve will, after next Tuesday, become owner of stocks in medicine enterprises amounting, according to a recent estimate of an English paper, to about $14,000. The balance is made up of personal effects and articles of jewelry.

Reward for Mrs. Crippen.

New York, Nov. 7.—To back his belief that Belle Elmore, the wife of Dr. H. H. Crippen, still lives, Dr. J. M. Munyon of Philadelphia has offered a reward of $50,000 to any one who will produce her.

"I will even pay it to the woman herself," he said, "if she will come forward in time to save her husband."

Dr. Crippen's appeal for a new trial was denied, and he is sentenced to be hanged to-morrow.

"I believe," continued Dr. Munyon, who formerly employed Crippen, "that either the woman is hiding to carry out one of the most consummate revenges in the annals of jealousy, or else that she has carried an advertising game too far. I have received letters from persons who know Mrs. Crippen, telling me that they have seen her alive in this country within the last few weeks.

"I never could be persuaded that Crippen killed his wife. He was too gentle a man."

A Philadelphia attorney declares that he can produce the living Belle Crippen within four days, and is applying to the State Department to try and stop Crippen's execution.

STOPPED AT BORDER

Polish Woman Has a Hard Job Joining Her Husband.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 7.—Mrs. Marie Wallenstein, with one baby in her arms and about to become the mother of another, went into hysterics here yesterday morning, when she was told by an immigration inspector that she could not enter Canada. The woman, who is a Pole, and who could understand only little English, had come from Newcastle, Pa., was on her way to Belleville, at which place she said her husband was employed as a laborer. The woman had no money. With her was her husband's brother, Ivan, who was also almost penniless.

When stopped by the inspector, Mrs. Wallenstein was asked to produce proof that her husband, whom she said had crossed the border into Canada only three weeks ago, was in the Dominion. This she seemed unable to do to the satisfaction of the inspector, so the mother and child were ordered taken back to Pennsylvania by the official. The forlorn little party made a sad group as they waited for the train, and the child cried lustily at noon, till the station policeman got it some dinner.

Yesterday afternoon the woman rummaged through her bandanna bundle and found several letters from her husband. She presented these to the inspector, who considered them sufficiently evidence to warrant admitting her to the country, so he stretched a point and allowed the little group to go to Belleville.

May Resume Negotiations.

Rome, Nov. 7.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Osservatore Romano comments on the Spanish Senate's approval of the law forbidding the establishment of new religious congregations in Spain, and says that as the result of an amendment, introduced at the eleventh hour, the interrupted negotiations between the holy see and Spain may possibly be resumed.

Will Have Commision Government.

Port Huron, Mich., Nov. 7.—The voters of Port Huron on Saturday adopted the new charter provided for in the home rule bill, thereby putting their stamp of approval on the commission form of government. The new form of government will go into effect Jan. 1. Port Huron is the first Michigan city of size to take this step.

Redmond Is Silent.

New York, Nov. 7. John Redmond, M.P., F. P. O'Connor, M.P., and the rest of the delegation which came here to collect funds for the cause of home rule in Ireland, sailed Saturday on the White Star liner Celtic. Mr. Redmond departed in no very good humor, though he said he was taking back $1,000 for $150,000 and expected $50,000 in addition as a result of the trip. Mr. Redmond was asked how soon Ireland was to have home rule, and he turned his back upon his questioners. He refused to discuss any other phases of politics.

National Apple Show Closes.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 7.—The first Canadian National Apple Show closed Saturday night. Chief Commissioner Ames, American exhibits joined in declaring it the greatest apple show ever held, though its management will have a deficit of at least $10,000. This did not expect it to be a financial success, the prizes alone being $25,000. Kelowna, B.C., carried off the premier prizes, though Washington and Oregon exhibitors won several medals and cash prizes.

Will Die From Burns.

London, Ont., Nov. 7. Screams from the home of Mrs. Margaret Tuthett of 21 Walnut street, attracted the neighbors yesterday morning, who, on entering, found her enveloped in flames. She is 80 years of age, and was partly unconscious when found. She was taken to the hospital and will die. From the waist down she is terribly burned. How the accident occurred no one knows, as the woman lived alone.

Plenty of Roast Apples.

Belleville, Nov. 7.—At an early hour Sunday morning a three-storey brick storehouse, belonging to ex-Mayor Graham of this city, was destroyed by fire. There were stored in the building about 10,000 barrels of apples, some 6,000 barrels of which were destroyed. The loss estimated on the building and contents is $25,000, and the insurance $9,200. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Fall In Gym. Cost His Life.

Moosejaw, Nov. 7.—Jack Secour, a young man of 23, employed in the city for the last few months as a carpenter, is dead in the hospital as the result of a fall in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium Friday night.

Does not take into consideration the one essential to woman's happiness—womanly health.

The woman who neglects her health is neglecting the very foundation of all good fortune. For without health love loses its lustre and gold is but dross.

Womanly health when lost or impaired may generally be regained by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

This Prescription has, for over 40 years, been curing delicate, weak, pain-wracked women, by the hundreds of thousands and this too in the privacy of their homes without their having to submit to indelicate questionings and offensively repugnant examinations.

Doctor Told Her She Did Not Have A Pint Of Good Blood In Her Body.

Mrs. Dan[illegible] P. Conner, Middle Sackville, N.B., says:—

In the spring of 1907 I was all run down, and the doctor told me I had not a pint of good blood in my body. I took different remedies from doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. After having taken a lot of different other kinds of medicine, and they did not seem to benefit me, I was almost in despair and did not know what to do until my husband met a lady and told her about my sickness and she told him to try Burdock Blood Bitters as she had received the greatest benefit from using it. My husband went and bought me a bottle, and after having taken it I felt better, so I kept on using one bottle after another until I had taken six in all and then I was strong and well. I am positive that my being alive to-day is due to the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. One spring since then I was not feeling very well and had a lot of work to do. I thought I would procure a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and after I had taken two I was able to do a lot of hard work all the summer, and I never felt better in my life. In the winter of 1906 I had Pneumonia, and it left me with a severe pain in the left side. Every morning when I would get out of bed I had to sit down for a while it was so painful. After I had used Burdock Blood Bitters the pain disappeared completely. It has also cured me of bleeding piles. I have received so much benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters that you may publish this as it may help others as it has me."

HUNT CLUB IS BURNED

Trophies and Prints Valued at Ten Thousand Dollars Are Among the Property Lost In Sunday Morning Fire at Canada's Finest Sporting Club — Only Walls Are Standing — No Water.

Toronto, Nov. 7.—The Toronto Hunt, the most active sporting organization in Canada, and a great centre in the social life of Toronto, had its fine clubhouse on the Kingston road, in Scarboro, (six miles east of the City Hall) totally destroyed by fire Sunday morning about 7 o'clock, when the head waiter discovered the building in a blaze. Nothing could be done to save it, and soon only the walls, or part of them, was standing. The loss of building, contents and trophies, the latter alone valued at $10,000, will foot up to between $40,000 and $50,000, said to be largely, if not altogether insured. A spark from a fire place is said to have started the trouble.

A meeting of the board of directors will be held at Chalkleigh, Mr. Beardmore's residence, to-night, to decide upon future plans. The club was about to build an addition to the south for lounge room and ballroom accommodation, and alterations were to have been made to the present structure to admit of bowling alleys. It was the intention to institute winter sports, such as tobogganning, skating and snowshoeing.

Besides the regular furniture and equipment, the clubhouse contained a fine collection of hunting and racing trophies and prizes, cups big and little of all kinds, and a large collection of hunting and racing prints—some of them hard to duplicate. The best portrait was a life-size one of D'Alton McCarthy, another of the master, George Beardmore, in hunting outfit, and portraits of Lord Minto and Countess Minto.

The fire was discovered when Head Waiter Temple came downstairs at 6.45 a.m., and found the ladies' room filled with fire. It is thought a live coal may have dropped from the open grate in the ladies' room during the night. So rapidly did the flames spread to the east and north wings that the servants and three guests who had remained over night had barely time to escape, and without saving any of their personal effects or greatly prized club trophies.

Charles Cronyn, W. D. Ross and Frank Drake were the only guests, and they made an attempt to first save some of the trophies, then, finding the rush of flames and density of smoke too great to encounter, tried to save the $5,000 stock of champagne, wines and liquor, but had to abandon this too.

There was absolutely no possibility of checking the progress of the flames, there being no water supply for fire-fighting, and not enough men to form an effective bucket brigade. Just above the room in which the fire broke out was a big water tank, and an effort was made to cut a hole that would allow the contents to flood the lower floor, but it had to be given up. There were only three hand extinguishers in the place, and these were useless. A section of the city fire department went down, but could do nothing, the large quantity of pine in the construction, together with a strong breeze, contributing to rapid destruction. The floors, too, had been re-waxed and oiled many times, that a great density of smoke resulted. In rapid succession, the ladies' room, general lounging room, hall, dining-room and bar, ladies' dressing and cloak room, became alike furnaces. Then the flames rushed east and north, licking up the kitchen and servants' quarters, from which nothing was saved, in the east wing and the men's smoking-room, lounging-room and guests' apartments, to the north.

The trees adjoining these wings began to scorch, and the efforts of the fire-fighters were concentrated on these to prevent a spread to the woods. A strong wind was blowing from the northwest. The fences leading to the stables and garage were torn down to prevent a spread to these structures.

Escaped Lunatic Perishes.

Brandon, Nov. 7.—Mrs. Charles H. Harding of Lethbridge, aged 45, was found Saturday night on the experimental farm, having just expired from exposure. Deceased was a harmless lunatic, who had been five years in the asylum burned on Friday night. She escaped in the confusion and snowstorm, and perished within a mile of the town and asylum. No inquest was considered necessary.

WILL MAKE A TRUCE

Nationalist Paper Declares That Both Parties In Britain Will Unite to Attend to Ireland's Claims—The Unionists May Not Provoke a General Election on Coronation Year—Lords to Reform.

Dublin, Nov. 7.—The Evening Herald, a Nationalist organ, professed Saturday to have learned from an authoritative source that the members of the conference of the Government and the Opposition over constitutional questions have reached a compromise regarding the House of Lords, and that the Unionst leaders have agreed to support the Government until the latter has had full opportunity to frame a plan for the settlement of Irish matters.

Agreement Reached.

London, Nov. 7.—The crisis of the constitutional conference has been reached. Twenty meetings have been held, and an approach to an agreement has been made. This is conceded by the pessimists, and otherwise the conference would have broken up long ago. Will the eight negotiators arrange a modus vivendi for coronation year and avoid a general election? The optimists without doubt are more hopeful than they have been since the death of King Edward. They assert that the Walthamstow election has convinced the Unionists that a premature election in January will be ruinous to tariff reform, and must be avoided by a timely compromise.

What politicians are saying at every turn is that Premier Asquith has suggested a basis of settlement for the budget and veto questions, and that Mr. Balfour is hesitating but is inclined to accept the terms, with the understanding that the House of Lords shall be allowed to reform itself at leisure.

The financial question has never presented any serious difficulties beyond the necessity of obtaining a definition of a finance bill by competent non-partisan authority. The veto question, if settled by the conference, is likely to be taken into joint session of the two Houses, after the bill has been carried three times by the Commons, and this will be regulated by the Government of the day so as to involve a final passage.

An arrangement of this kind will satisfy the Radicals, but can be tolerated by the Unionists solely on the ground that the elections must be put off in the interest of tariff reform.

Rainbow on the West Coast.

Vancouver, Nov. 7.—His Majesty's Canadian ship Rainbow arrived at Esquimalt at 10 o'clock this morning. Admiral Kingsmill boarded the ship and a salute was fired simultaneously by the Rainbow and the shore batteries. This will be followed by a salute of thirteen guns to the admiral at 2.30 p.m.

Hon. William Templeman and G. Desbarats, Deputy-Minister for Naval Affairs, went on board and received the vessel in the name of the Government of Canada.

Deputy Minister Desbarats states that Esquimault station will be formally taken over by Canada from the Imperial authorities on Nov. 9.

Goderich Depot Burned.

Goderich, Nov. 7.—The G.T.R.'s beautiful depot was totally destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon about five o'clock. The fire originated in the ticket office, where a small coal oil stove was being used for heating, as the furnaces had not been going this fall, being out of repair. The firemen succeeded in saving all the surrounding property, freight cars, etc. This depot was an ornament to the town, costing about $35,000 to build.

Is This Your Boy

Who At Tender Age Must Face the Hard, Cold World Without Preparation or Protection.

No. You could not think of such a thing. And yet, would you neglect your health as you do if you waited to think of your family and how they would get along without you.

You have not the old-time vigour and energy. You go home tired and worn out, feel cross and irritable, lack the old-time smile and good cheer which brought sunshine into your home at your arrival.

You don't sleep well, the brain is not so clear and active, little things annoy and worry you. In short, the nervous system is exhausted. You know this, but do not want to consult a doctor, and scarcely know what to do.

Use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. It cannot fail to do you good, for it is made up of the elements of which your run-down system is most in need. Through the medium of the blood it sends new energy and vigour to every organ of the human body.

You can feel yourself getting stronger every day. You can prove it by noting your increase in weight. You will sleep better, appetite and digestion will improve, and you will feel again the courage and energy which can only exist side by side with good health and steady nerves.

You can put a stop to the wasting process to-day by beginning this treatment. You need not let delay bring you a day nearer to nervous collapse.

This treatment is not a stimulant to whip up tired nerves and brain. It cures in nature's way by filling the system with rich red blood. It will not cure in a day, but its benefits are natural and lasting. With persistence on your part it will work wonders.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. Portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book Author, on every box.

Dropsy—

Given up by Doctor

"I had dropsy, and was told by my family physician that there was no chance for me. My family also gave me up. My limbs and body were swollen one-third larger than natural, water collected around my heart and I had to be propped up in bed to keep from smothering. I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy until I was entirely cured. This was in 1902, and I am now able to do any kind of work on my farm. My cure was certainly marvelous."

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has been wonderfully successful in relieving heart trouble. Its tonic effect upon the heart nerves and muscles is a great factor in assisting nature to overcome heart weakness.

The W. E. East Athletic Society has decided to enter a junior team in the O.H.A. This notice in the Peterborough Hockey Club of their intentions. They may be two teams in the Peterborough O.H.A. from Peterborough as the Peterborough Club will probably enter a team in the juniors. This will be the matter at the annual meeting on next Wednesday night. Where the material is to come from is hard to figure, however. It should be taken into account that the new age limit in the junior series comes into force this year, and that all junior players must be under nineteen years of age instead of twenty as has been the case. This will bar a number of players who would otherwise be eligible.

Annual Meeting Of The Peterborough Hockey Club

Everything points to a boom year for hockey in Peterborough this winter as there is an abundance

Many Peterborough Boys Are Real Rugby Stars

Although Peterborough is not represented by a rugby team this year this city has a number of her native sons in the game and all of them are performing in stellar fashion. It is doubtful whether any place of similar size in Canada has turned out so many players. Just look over this list. Ben Simpson, centre half for the Hamilton Tigers an dreconstructed as the best kicking half back in the game. Ross Craig, capt of the Dundas O.R.U. team, who has no superior as a line plunger, Gordon Campbell, quarter back of the Varsity seconds, Harry Smith, half back of Royal Military College, Dick Sheehy, half back with Otta waCollege, Ken Overend, centre scrimmage with Queen's and Ross Dobbin, captain of the S.P.S. team, all are Peterborough boys. In addition to this list may be mentioned Murray Kennedy, of the Ottawa Rough Riders and Mike Kennedy of Varsity, who have lived and played the game here

Sues Wife for Not Dressing.

Sterling, Ill., Nov. 7.—James Conkling of Bureau County Saturday filed a petition for divorce, in which he sets forth that his wife refuses to dress like other women in the neighborhood, and that the style of attire adopted by her causes him much embarrassment.

He alleges that she has refused to buy a new dress for two years. He states that he had frequently urged her to dress more fashionably and in keeping with the season's styles, but that his wife maintained that it was too costly.

He also alleges that she has deserted him.

Queen Mary and the Poor.

London, Nov. 7.—The spectacle of a Queen busy unpacking, sorting and arranging piles of rough garments for the poor is not a frequent one.

Queen Mary throughout the past week has devoted several hours each day to tasks of this kind and has worked as hard as any of the women who have been helping her. She is patroness of the London Needlework Guild, an institution which makes garments for the poor.

Strike Not Settled.

Chicago, Nov. 7.—Hopes of an immediate settlement of the garment workers' strike disappeared yesterday, when the strikers voted not to accept the agreement recommended by T. A. Rickert, president of the United Garment Workers.

The Chicago Federation of Labor voted yesterday to uphold the garment workers.

Will Sue Roosevelt.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 7.—Judge Simon E. Baldwin, Democratic nominee for governor, announces that he will bring suit against former President Roosevelt, on account of certain statements reported to have been made by Roosevelt in a speech in New Hampshire, relative to Judge Baldwin's attitude on labor legislation.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE SICK Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured HEAD Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head ACHE is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure it while others do not.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills make a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them.

FELL FROM LADDER.

One Man Is Dead and Two Hurt In Accident at Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 7.—B. Dashley, aged 42 years, was killed and Benjamin Phillips and Richard Misener were seriously injured when a ladder on which they were working broke at the plant of the Ontario Power Co., just below the Horseshoe Falls, shortly after nine o'clock yesterday morning. The men, who were all riggers, were ascending a long ladder, to reach the frame work on which to complete their task.

They had started up the ladder in a group, and had gone up almost thirty feet, when one of the perpendicular props supporting the ladder, gave way without any warning, and the three men were dashed down. In falling Dashley struck against the frame work of the scaffold, which the men were mounting. All three were found unconscious.

Two of the power company physicians, Drs. McGarry and Wilson, were summoned, and succeeded in reviving Misener and Phillips. Dashley was hurried to the hospital, and died just as he was being carried into the building. His skull had been badly fractured at the base of the brain. Phillips' injuries consist of severe scalp wounds and general contusions and lacerations to body and limbs. He may also have received internal injuries. Misener suffered a badly bruised leg and many minor cuts.

At the power plant yesterday afternoon it was said that the men were not ordered to go up the ladder, but went of their own accord. Dashley had been, up to a short time ago, proprietor of the Queen's Park Hotel, at Niagara Falls Centre. He is survived by a wife and three small children.

Laying for Briand.

Paris, Nov. 7.—The United Socialists are preparing for a violent attack on the new Briand Cabinet on Tuesday, when it will make its first appearance in the chamber. M. Jaures boasts, now that MM. Millerand and Viviani are no longer in the Ministry, that he can bowl the Cabinet over on Tuesday like ninepins.

The General Federation of Labor has called twenty-five meetings, in all the working centres of France, from Lille to Marseilles, to make a gigantic protest against the pretentions of the Ministry to deny the right of state employes on strike. The Labor Federation leaders realize that M. Briand is determined to deprive their association of all its political and revolutionary powers, and they are both working tooth and nail to excite the workmen to join them in the struggle.

M. Briand is certain to have against him on Tuesday the 183 Socialist deputies who refused him their confidence last Sunday, but it is believed by the best judges that he will find at least a substantial working majority, composed of Moderate and Conservative Republicans and Radicals. M. Briand's popularity with the country at large is greater than anything seen in France since Gambetta.

Commission for Vancouver.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 7.—Vancouver electors Saturday voted against the bylaw for a board of control as part of the civic government. Owing to an all-day rain, the total vote was under eleven hundred, out of a possible twenty-four thousand electors enrolled, and the bylaw was defeated by the narrow margin of six votes. As a result of the small vote the question will likely be re-submitted to the electors in the January municipal elections, when electors may be asked to choose between a board of control and a commission form of civic government.

Heavy Sentences.

Brandon, Nov. 7.—At noon Saturday Carson, Newton and Welsh were found guilty of burglary at the Hamiota jewelry store. Welsh was sentenced to four years in penitentiary. Newton to fourteen years on the Portage and fourteen on the Hamiota charge, the sentences to run concurrently. Carson, the leader of the gang, was sentenced to fourteen years on the Portage and fifteen years on the Hamiota charge, and 25 lashes.

The sentences were pronounced by Justice Richards, who had sentenced Carson to seven years on a previous charge.

THE THIRD REPUBLIC.

France's Latest Form of Government Now Over 40 Years Old.

On September 4, 1870, Leon Gambetta, speaking for himself and other radical members of the Legislative Assembly, announced the deposition of the Bonapartist dynasty and the establishment of the republic. This was two days after the battle of Sedan, in the Franco-German war, and the capture of MacMahon's army and Napoleon III. The campaign entered upon so confidently by that potentate thus collapsed and he was a prisoner in the hands of the Germans. On the evening of the 4th the government of national defence was established, with Gen. Trochu at the head. While this was being done the Empress Eugenie, disguised, fled secretly from Paris and entered Belgium, on her way to England, where she has resided ever since.

The governmental scheme which was created on September 4 has lasted 40 years and is stronger to-day than it ever was in the past. In duration it has outlived any other system which France has had since the overthrow of Louis XVI. and the Bourbons in 1792. The first republic, which began in 1792, lasted, in its various shapes, until 1804, when it gave way to the first empire, under Bonaparte, and that was subverted in 1874, in the war waged against Bonaparte by combined Europe. It was succeeded by the restored Bourbon monarchy under Louis XVIII. in 1814, which went down in the revolution of July, in 1830, Charles X. then being at its head. The Orleanist monarchy of the Citizen King Louis Philippe, which was created in 1830 was submerged in the storm of 1848, and the second republic was started, which gave place to the second empire in 1852, under Napoleon III., and this collapsed at Sedan, when the present regime came into being.

Thus the third republic has had a longer career than that of any two of its predecessors since 1792. For several years it was conceded to be only an experiment, which endured because a majority of the French people could not unite upon any other form of government. Along until the end of the Presidency in 1879 of Napoleon III.'s old warrior, MacMahon, there was doubt as to whether it would weather the storms which seemed to be gathering around it. Even as recently as 1889, in the Boulanger scare, the advent of the Man on Horseback was often very confidently predicted. But it passed through the tentative stage before the death of President Carnot in 1894, and is now a permanency. Just four days after Gambetta proclaimed the establishment of the republic the United States cabled its recognition of the new regime and welcomed it at the council board of the nations. Five months later it was recognized by the great powers of Europe. Its alliance with England and Russia and its ententes with other countries gives France a larger influence in the affairs of the world than it exerted previously since the days of Bonaparte's power in the first republic a century ago.

The Careful Sentry.

The young private had been posted as sentry on C squadron stables. But lo, when the sergeant of the guard came round on his visit he was nowhere to be seen. The sergeant was about to depart to make inquiries when there came a rustling noise from a heap of straw and the sentry stood before him minus his boots and looking very sleepy.

"Hello!" cried the sergeant. "Here you are, eh? Where were you when I came round just now?"

"Marchin' round," was the sentry's reply, given in tones of conscious virtue.

"Marchin' round, were you? Why, you've got your boots off!"

"Yes, sergeant; I took 'em off so's I shouldn't wake the 'cases!"—London Tit-Bits.

The Thieving Arabs.

"Their whole lives are given up to the breeding of their flocks and herds and to systematic robbery," writes Douglas Carruthers of his experiences in northwestern Arabia. "The Bedoun lives in his tent for a week at a time or until the fit comes over him and he calls his companions, and off they go on a foray to steal camels in order to increase their own herds. The Arab's great idea is to possess a rifle, for that means power. In order to do this he must steal camels. So, having stolen camels, he purchases a rifle. Then come more raids to take more camels, this time in order to buy a wife. Camels are their sole means of exchange."

A Fair Proposition.

A popular comedian and playwright was praising the humorous value of suggestions. "It is funnier to suggest a thing," he said, "than to say it out. Playwrights should remember this. Suggestion-pregnant suggestion is what makes really funny the little boy's remark to his father. 'Pa, if you help me with my arithmetic lesson to-night I'll tell you where ma hid your trousers.'"

Altogether Wrong.

"Pa," said the blooming daughter of the household, "I wish you wouldn't call young Mr. Softleigh a popinjay."

"And why not?"

"Because he isn't a jay, and there doesn't seem to be any hope of his popping."

Bucharest.

The population of Bucharest is about 300,000. The houses are mostly of one or two stories in the residential section and built separately with a great deal of open space. The city is very widespread, and covers an area of about twenty-five square miles.

A Famous Palace.

The palace in the Rue de Lille once owned by Empress Josephine's son, Eugene de Beauharnois, Viceroy of Italy, ever since the battle of Waterloo has been the home of the Prussian representative on the banks of the Seine.

Kicked In Stomach by Horse.

Kingston, Nov. 7.—Donald Clarke aged 15, son of E. M. Clarke of Odessa, who was kicked in the stomach by a horse, is dead. He was driving to school with two other children when the horse ran away, kicking over the dashboard. The others escaped without injuries.

Crowe Gets Ten Years.

Toronto, Nov. 7.—A wire was received at detective headquarters Saturday evening from Inspector Duncan at Winnipeg, stating that Gerald M. Crowe, the Toronto man, who was found guilty of forgery of a check for $2,650 on the Bank of Hamilton has been sentenced to ten years in the Penitentiary. The inspector, who intended to bring Crowe back to Toronto to answer to two similar charges here in case he was acquitted in Winnipeg, will return without his man.

The Toronto warrants were for passing forged checks on the City Dairy Co.

A Matter of Station.

The late Chief Justice Burton, when a practicing barrister, was once nonplussed by a dirty-looking bricklayer who came to be sworn.

"Really, witness, when you have to appear before the court, it is your duty to be more clean and decent in your appearance."

"Well, if it comes to that, I am every bit as well dressed as you are," was the reply.

"How do you mean?" asked the barrister, angrily.

"Why, you come here in your working clothes, and I'm come in mine."

Unanswered.

To "Anxious Inquirer," who asks us if there are rats on a cutboat and whether cowcatchers were first put on milk trains, we reply that the editor who knows all about such things is busy looking up whether or not Richard III., when he stopped King Henry's bier, thus became the first temperance crusader, and will not be able to answer Anxious Inquirer until he rests up a little.—Browning's Magazine.

PETERBOROUGH BOY SCOUTS' INTERESTING CONTESTS ARE DOING GOOD WORK

On the past two Saturdays the members of the Peewit Troop of Peterborough Boy Scouts have engaged in scouting contests, the 1st, 3rd, 5th and 7th patrols, opposing the 2nd, 4th, 6th and 8th patrols, and on each occasion has the palm of victory rested with the latter division under Adjutant Richardson, although in last Saturday's contest the margin was very slight. Each division meets at a certain place unknown to the other and proceeds to a suitable place to pitch camp. Details of the route followed, being made by the officer in command. At a fixed time the sentries are posted and scouts sent out whose duties are (1) to locate the enemy's camp (2) to capture any of the enemy that they may be able. These duties tend to develop greatly the qualities of originality and self-control, originality to devise means of gaining information and means of capture and self-control and honour in admitting capture if captured by one of the enemy. The best of feeling has characterized the contests and the boys have each time come home with the satisfaction of knowing that good work is being done and the ends of scouthood are being to a greater or less extent realized. Owing to the difficulty encountered in doing satisfactory work while new recruits are continually coming in it has been deemed advisable to cease enrolling any new members after Nov. 15th. Anyone wishing to join must get application blank and have it in the hands of the scoutmaster on or before that date. Applications will be given to anyone requesting it by the scout master.

EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN OPENS AT ST. JAMES' CHURCH

Rev. R. H. Whiteside preached yesterday morning and evening in St. James's Church, opening a two weeks evangelistic campaign.

In his morning address from the text Mal. 3, 10, he appealed to the congregation for cooperation and prayer dwelling on conditions of success sin revival efforts. The evening service was marked by a strong presentation of need of personal religion. His text was Gen 39: "Where art Thou?"

The men's meeting in the afternoon was attended by over eighty men and proved a meeting of great interest. The Brotherhood class constituted the choir and rendered special music. Rev. Mr. Whiteside is a sympathetic speaker with a clear message of salvation through faith in the Living Lord. The services throughout the day were strong in their spiritual tone and appeal. He is also the possessor of a good voice and has marked qualities as a leader. In the evening service he was assisted by a choir of 35 voices.

NO MORE DISTRESS FROM THE STOMACH

No Dyspepsia, Gas, Heartburn or Indigestion Five Minutes Later

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a distressed, out-of-order stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin, and take a little just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it prevents fermentation and takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery at any drug store, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure almost any chronic case of Dyspepsia, Indigestion or any other Stomach trouble.

OBITUARY

She leaves to mourn her loss three sons and one daughter. The sons are Patrick of Peterborough, Wilfred, of Dummer, and John at home. The daughter is Mrs. David Conway, who resides in Doure.

The funeral will be held to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock to Norwood.

Explosions Cost Twelve Lives.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 7.—Two explosions, occurring within a few minutes of each other yesterday morning, resulted in the death of twelve men in the Lawson mine at Black Diamond, thirty miles southeast of Seattle.

Seven men going down on a shift and five men coming up were caught between the first and sixth levels, and it is certain that all perished. Natural gas combustion is assigned as the cause. The men were foreigners.

Will Go to Ottawa.

Montreal, Nov. 7.—It is stated here that Henri Bourassa, Armand Lavergne and Jean Provost will all three go to Ottawa at the coming Federal election. Had Mr. Lavergne been a candidate in Drummond and Arthabasca, he would have had 500 of a majority, so great is his popularity in his father's and his uncle's old constituency, but when the federal contest comes around, he will probably run for Montmagny. As for Mr. Bourassa, his eyes are said to be on St. James, against Mr. Gervais, although he would have harder work there than in a rural constituency. Mr. Prevost will, of course, run for Terrebone.

Largest Schooner Is Aground.

London, Nov. 7.—The largest sailing vessel in the world, the steel, five-masted Preussen, is pounding on the rocks in Crab Bay, Dover, battered by waves forced along by strong southwest gale. The crew have not yet been taken off owing to the storm.

The Preussen was in collision late Saturday night with the across-channel steamer Brighton, which had 90 passengers, and which, though injured, was able to put back to New Haven.

The schooner is of 4,700 tons, and carries 8,000 tons cargo.

Thursday—Annual Thank offering of the Faithful Workers' Mission Band at 4.30.

Friday—Boys' Brotherhood meets at 7.15.

AT ST. JOHN'S

Yesterday was a joyful day, being the 75th Anniversary of the Dedication Festival. The Altar was crowded and the services were bright and inspiring.

A men's fellowship tea in the school at 5 o'clock, p.m., was well attended, and with the Rector's Warden, Mr. W. Johnson in the chair, the gathering proved to be a really helpful event.

Evensong was sung with a true accent of worship, and the Rector in the sermon pleaded that all worshippers would pay for a deeper conception of the spiritual life; and take a real part in all the church services.

The choir as usual seemed to overcrowd their space and deserve the best that can possibly be said of their unselfish services, so splendidly demonstrated yesterday.

MAYOR DENIES BLASPHEMY

Replying to the Montreal Council, Mayor of Rome Says He Only Compared the Present Papal Administration With Foregoing Ones, But Real Trouble Lay In Unchristian Remarks of Prelate.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Ernest Nathan, Mayor of Rome, has sent the following letter to the mayor and council of Montreal:

"Gentlemen, His Eminence the Archbishop of Montreal, in accordance with other reverend and eminent men, who direct the political organization of the Roman Catholic Church, has called a meeting of the faithful to scourge me for blasphemy, for insulting God, the Saviour, and His Holiness the Pope.

"At a meeting of the common council, many of you gentlemen before approving a similar vote of censure, in the uprightness of your judgements, desired to have before you the precise text of the averred blasphemies. I have much pleasure in enclosing you a copy, both of my speech and a later reply to the papal bull. I trust you will perceive the justness of your reserve, the injustice of a supposition, whereby I am accused of insulting religion, and its divine representative.

"A man who, like myself, has a profound belief in religious faith, whatever shape it assumes, cannot be guilty of what is truly blasphemy. As the whole gist of my words truly points out, my criticisms do not affect faith. They treat of a political organization, waging war in faith's name against my country, striving to undo Italian unity, to repress and condemn liberty of conscience, power of research, modern science, civil progress. Men holding public office have the undoubted right to criticize the hostile attitude and to show as in a picture how different the past papal sway of Rome was to its present government.

"So much and no more is set forth in my words, whereby, if the charity of his reverence the archbishop, which becometh at home, has been excessive, surely that excess has been accounted for by the lack of temperance and justice of his unchristian strictures.

(Signed) "Ernesto Nathan,
"Mayor of Rome."

This letter will be presented to the City Council at its meeting to-morrow night.

There are twenty-nine Catholic families fewer in the parish of St. Louis de France than there were this time last year, and Cure Bellanger deplores the fact that the French-Canadians are allowing the foreign population to crowd them out.

Neighbors' Heartless Conduct.

Buchanan, Sask., Nov. 8.—The circumstances surrounding the death from suffocation of three children of A. Todd, farmer, living a few miles from here, place the neighbors in a very bad plight. The father of the children was away with a threshing gang and the mother was milking the cows, when a fire started in the kitchen, and the mother rushed back to rescue the children. A baby of six months was dead, although it had been carried to the bedroom by the eldest child, aged four. A second child died four hours later, and, when the mother rushed to the neighbors to ask them to go to town for a doctor, they all refused. Word reached here next day, and the doctor went, but was unable to save the life of the eldest child.

National Guard Demoralized.

Dallas, Texas, Nov. 8.—With three officers and four company officers having tendered their resignations, and three companies urgently requesting the Government to muster them out, the Texas National Guard is practically demoralized as the result of the recent conviction of Sergt. Manley of Company E, who bayonetted and killed a spectator during President Taft's visit to Dallas a year ago. Manley was given a life sentence.

Believe He Suicided.

Brockville, Nov. 8.—The belief seems to be gaining ground in Morristown that Barton S. Cruikshanks committed suicide by drowning himself last June. His widow, however, sticks to the theory of foul play. A motive for suicide, it is said, may have been discouragement over the failure of the military school, which Cruikshanks was trying to establish west of the village.

Prominent Cavan Man Dead.

Omemee, Nov. 8.—James McLean of Mt. Pleasant, Durham County, died Sunday night in his 85th year. He was prominent in Cavan Township, being a justice of the peace, and chairman of the board of health. He is survived by his widow, to whom he had been married 62 years, and by seven children.

Didn't Get Permits.

Port Arthur, Nov. 8.—That the official building permit figures do not show the total was evidenced when three local contractors were given nominal fines in the Police Court for neglecting to take permits on a total of twenty business blocks and residences.

Curious Coincidence.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 8.—W. O. Fitzgerald, a painter, hurrying homeward with an oyster loaf early yesterday morning, stumbled against a post, fell into a shallow puddle of water and was drowned.

Thomas G. Fitzgerald, with another oyster loaf tucked under his arm, rushed from a restaurant to board a car. He fell beneath the wheels, and may not recover from his injuries.

The two men were not related.

CAMPAIGN IS ENDED

Gambling on Result of New York State Fight Is Active With Odds at Three to One In Favor of Dix—Roosevelt and Stimson Make a Last Appeal—No Liquor to Be Sold on Election Day in Big City.

New York, Nov. 8.—The New York gubernatorial campaign of 1910 passed into history last night with Henry L. Stimson, the Republican candidate and Theodore Roosevelt, his most prominent backer, voicing their last appeals for votes. The final word on the Democratic side was spoken Sunday night, when John A. Dix, the head of the ticket, sent to Mr. Stimson his answer to the twelve questions telegraphed by Stimson to Dix's home in Thomson.

Mr. Dix spent the last day of the campaign at home. Mr. Stimson occupied the morning preparing an answer to his rival's reply on Sunday night, and the rest of the day and evening on the stump, or in an automobile hurrying between political rallies in New York City.

The Democratic leaders declare that the quiet that prevailed yesterday on their side of the campaign was itself evidence of confidence. "Our party machinery up state is in better shape than at any time for the past fifteen years," said Chairman Rodenbeck. "All the details on election are arranged and we are not looking for trouble anywhere."

Chairman Prentice of the Republican state committee said last night: "I am absolutely confident we'll carry the whole ticket, and I don't think the vote will be close."

He added that he believed campaigning up to the eleventh hour, such as Mr. Stimson and Col. Roosevelt indulged in last night, was useful in a big centre of population like New York.

The list will be on and the great white way will be a vast vale of tears early Wednesday morning. Announcement was made yesterday that applications made by hotel and lobster palaces for permission to stay open all election night had been refused. No drink can be legally sold after 1 a.m.

Betting on the New York State election was lively in Wall street yesterday afternoon. Up to the close of the market it was estimated that about $400,000 had been wagered on the gubernatorial contest by curb brokers and members of the exchange. The prevailing odds were 3 to 1 on Dix.

$8,000,000 to the Good.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Campbell Sweeny, manager of the Bank of Montreal in Vancouver, who is here to-day, says that the Government of British Columbia has no less than $8,000,000 to the good, as a result of the sale of the Prince Rupert townsites, and the dues coming in from a very great development of the lumber industry.

The banker thinks that Premier McBride will spend a good deal of this surplus money in providing good wagon roads in parts of the country which are almost inaccessible on account of their remoteness.

Guilty of Forgery.

Guelph, Nov. 8.—Lon Watson, alias Thomas Burns, was brought before Judge Chadwick yesterday afternoon on three charges of forgery, pleaded guilty and was remanded for sentence. Watson had forged several cheques using the name of E. B. Clancy of the Wellington Hotel. Norman King, on a charge of indecent assault, also pleaded guilty, and was remanded for sentence. King was out on suspended sentence at the time of the assault.

A Lack of Power.

Port Arthur, Nov. 8.—Port Arthur is suffering considerable inconvenience, owing to scarcity of electrical power, due to the Current River running dry. The hydro-electric and substation, to take power from Kakabeka Falls will be ready about Dec. 1, when the supply will meet all possible demands, but in the meantime it has been necessary to resurrect the old steam plant at the Current River power house.

Reception to General Benson.

St. Catharines, Nov. 8.—A formal reception was tendered last night to Sir Fred Benson, major-general of the British forces, honorary colonel of the 19th Regiment, at the local armory, and was attended by several hundred prominent military men, civilians and ladies.

A Danger to Navigation.

Sisconsett, Mass., Nov. 8.—The steamer Noordam, from Rotterdam for New York, reported by wireless yesterday, that she passed a wreck very dangerous to navigation in latitude 41.1 north, longitude 68.3 west. The wrecked vessel was about one hundred feet long, and was nearly awash.

Carrick Buys Montreal Property.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—J. J. Carrick, M.P.P. for Port Arthur, yesterday completed the purchase of the Redpath property, which is quite a large slice of Mount Royal, for half a million dollars. The city had been negotiating for the property for two years to add it to Mount Royal Park.

An Empire Flag.

London, Nov. 8.—The Canadian Associated Press learns that the creation of an empire flag is being discussed in Government circles, but it is likely the idea will be deferred for discussion at the Imperial conference.

The Quebec Bridge.

VERY LITTLE ALTERATION

Prominent Member of the Government Says There Will Be Very Little Change In the Present Tariff as a Result of the Reciprocity Conference—No Statement to Be Made For Some Time Yet.

Ottawa, Nov. 8.—The Canadian and United States trade negotiators were again in conference yesterday afternoon, but, after a sitting of three hours, it was announced that there was nothing yet available for publication regarding the progress of the negotiations. The commissioners on both sides are observing the strictest confidence as to the nature of the respective Canadian and American proposals relative to free trade, and it is stated that no authoritative announcement as to the progress made or the tentative agreements reached may be expected for some days. Beyond the general statement as to the basis of the negotiations, and the probability of any tariff agreement being mainly confined to a larger measure of free trade in natural products, as already outlined, any authoritative information affecting the detailed aspects of the whole question is not available.

The two meetings of the American commissioners with Hon. Messrs. Fielding and Paterson have not yet developed any tangible results calling for consideration by the Government as a whole, and it is understood that it will take several days of further careful consideration of the various complex aspects of reciprocal tariff reductions before even a tentative agreement as to some of the proposed changes can be reached.

A member of the Government told our correspondent last night that he anticipated no very radical tariff changes as a result of the present negotiations, and that in any event there would be no serious reduction, if any, in Canada's customs revenue.

Interviewing Managements.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Committees representing the G.T.R. and C.P.R. conductors and trainmen, are here interviewing the managements of the respective roads, the former with respect to getting more of the strikers back, there still being many unemployed, and the C.P.R. with reference to modifications in the agreement drawn up last summer.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By L. Phillips Oppenheim.)

Why not? she exclaimed almost fiercely. You have heard his story more minutes. You have passed him from the report of those who were once his friends. He stood at the deepest. Better and worse men than he have done that. It he were wholly bad, do you believe that after all these years I should care for him still?

I bent my head. The woman was human, even towards me now. She seemed to have lost the desire to attack. Her voice had grown sharper and more pleasant. Her carefully attained self-possession was somewhat disordered, and the traces were left by her tears were plainly visible. Her face seemed suddenly to have become ravished and worn, the flaming light in her strangely coloured eyes was a revealing assertion of her earnestness. She was not acting now. Behind what lay behind the storm I could not tell.

You seem disposed to talk to me, I ventured. What I have done to offend you I do not know.

Perhaps not, I answered. Yet I cannot see what we can by raking up this miserable history. It is both painful and profitless.

I will say no more, she declared, with a sudden note of dignity in her tone. I can see that I am indeed not only in your mind. After all, it does not really matter. No one likes to be thought worse of than they deserve, and women are all a little foolish. But at least you must answer me one question. I have the right to ask it. You must tell me where he is.

Where who is? I asked.

Again her eyes flamed upon me. Her lips parted a little and I could see the white shimmer of her teeth.

Oh, you shall not fence with me like a baby, she exclaimed. Tell me, or lie to me, or refuse to tell me! Which is it?

Upon my honour, I said, looking at her curiously, I have no idea whom you mean.

She looked at me steadily for several moments, her lips parted, her breath seeming to come sharply between her teeth.

I mean your father, she said. Whom else should I mean?

CHAPTER XX.

TWO TO ONE.

I took a step at the woman who was waiting my answer with every appearance of feverish interest.

What should I know about him? I asked slowly. I have been told that he is dead. I know no more than that.

She caught me through my words and stung me.

It is not possible! she exclaimed. I must have heard of it. When he left me it was less than three months ago. I seemed better than I had known him for years.

Of my life, I said, I have undoubtedly that my father died by his own hand after leaving England. To-night is the first time I was told that this was not the fact. I understood from the informant said, that he had been recently—

She drew a sharp breath between her teeth and suddenly struck the cushioned arm of the carriage by her side with clenched hand.

It was he! she declared. Who could tell you so if it is a lie?

Do you mean that he is not dead? I exclaimed.

Do you mean that you have not seen him yourself within the last few months? she demanded fiercely. He left me to come to you on the first day of the New Year.

I have never seen him to my knowledge in my life, I answered.

She leaned back in her seat muttering something to herself which I could not catch. Passion-tides of all sorts though she must have been, I was convinced that her consternation was genuine enough. She did not speak at all for some time. As for me, I sat silent with the horror of a thought. Underneath the rug my limbs were cold and listless. I sat looking out of the rain-spotted window into the dark mass with fixed staring eyes, and a hideous fancy in my brain. Every now and then I thought that I could see it a white, evil face pressed close to the blurred glass, genuine in open me. Every shriek of the engine and there were many just then, for we were passing through a network of sidings brought beads of moisture on to my forehead, made me start and shake like a criminal. Surely that was a cry! I started in my seat, only to see that my companion, now her cold self again, was watching me intently.

I am afraid, she said softly, that you are not very strong. The excitement of talking of these things has been too much for you.

I have never had a day's illness in my life, I answered. I am perfectly well.

I am glad, she said simply. I must touch what I was telling you. Your father was continually talking and thinking of you. He knew all about you at college. He knew about your degree, your cricket and rowing. Lately he began to get restless. He lost sight of you after you left Oxford and it worried him. There were reasons, as you know, why it was not well for him to come to England, but nevertheless he determined to brave it out. It was to find you that he risked so much. He left me on New Year's Day, and I have never heard a word from him since. That is why I came to England.

The whole reason? I asked, like a fool.

The whole reason, she affirmed simply.

I do not wish to see my father, I said. If he comes to me I shall tell him so.

He wants to tell you his story himself, she murmured.

I would never listen to it, I answered.

She sighed.

You are very young, she said. You do not know what temptation is. You do not know how badly he was treated. You have heard his history, perhaps, from his enemies. He is getting old now, Guy. I think that if you saw him now you would pity him.

Me pity, I answered, would never be strong enough to suffer me to open the door to him if he should come. He has left me alone all these years. The only favour I would ever ask of him would be that he continues to do so.

You will believe the story of strangers?

No one in the world could be a greater stranger to me than he, she sighed.

You will not even let me be your friend, she pleaded. You are young, you are perhaps ambitious. There may be many ways in which I could help you.

As you helped my father, perhaps, I answered bitterly. Thank you, I have no need of friends—that sort of friends.

Her eyes seemed to narrow a little, the smile upon her lips was forced.

I, that kind of you! she exclaimed. You father was in a position of great trust. It is different with you. You are idle, and you need a career. England has so little to offer her young men, but there are other countries.

I interrupted her brusquely.

Thank you, I said, that I have employment and such ambitions as I have consist of nothing but an honourable career.

Again I saw that contraction of her eyes, but she never winced or changed her tone.

You have employment? she asked, as though surprised.

Yes. As you doubtless know, I am in the service of the Duke of Rowchester, I told her.

It is news to me, she replied. You will forgive me at least for being interested, Guy. But when you say in the service of the Duke of Rowchester you puzzle me. In what sense does that mean?

I became one of the Duke's secretaries, I answered.

The Duke, then, a politician? she asked, what he needs secretaries.

Not at all, I answered drily. He is President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, or Children, whichever you like. We have a large correspondence.

She picked up her book.

I am afraid that I understand you, she said. You have a good deal of the brutality of youth Guy, and, I might add of its credulity. So. Where work is it I wonder, that you have taken so abjectly with such an open mouth? If I have enemies I have not discovered them. But, after all, it matters little.

We did not speak again until we neared the junction. Then she began to gather up her things.

How are you getting home? she asked. It is two o'clock, and raining.

I am going to walk, I answered.

But that is absurd, she protested. I have a closed carriage here. I insist that you let me drive you. It is only common humanity, and you have that great box, too.

I buttoned up my coat.

Mrs. Smith-Lessing, I said, you perhaps wish to force me into seeming ungracious. You have even called me brutal. It is your fault. You give me no chance of escape. You even force me now to tell you that I do not desire—that I will not accept any hospitality at your hands.

She fastened her jacket with trembling fingers. Her face she kept averted from me.

Very well, she said softly. I shall not trouble you any more.

At the junction I fetched the sleepy looking porter to see to her luggage and then left her. My ring I left in the station-master's office, and with the dispatch-box in my hand I climbed the steps from the station, and turned into the lane. Almost at once which led to Brasted. I heard behind me a hansom coming with a great noise of wheels and motor horns, with blazing lights and insistent hoot, came flying past me and on into the darkness. I caught a momentary glimpse of Mrs. Smith-Lessing's face as the cab flashed by, a weird little silhouette, came and gone in a second. Away ahead I saw the mud and rain from the pools fly up into the air in a constant stream caught in the lights, white glare of the brilliant searchlamps. Then the cab turned a corner and vanished.

I was tired, yet I found the change from the close railway carriage and the tension of the last few hours delightful. The road along which I trudged ran straight to the sea, the distant roar of which was already on my ears, and the wet wind which blew in my face was salt and refreshing. It was a little after two in the morning, and the darkness would have been absolute but for a watery moon, which every now and then gave a fitful light. For a mile or more I walked with steady, swinging footsteps. Then suddenly I found myself slackening my pace. I walked slower and slower. At last I stopped.

AN EPISODE

They were sitting in the parlor. He wore an anxious, almost impatient look. She seemed undecided. He had been pleading with her for some time.

There was a moment's silence. Then he spoke:

"What will your answer be?" he asked. "Yes or no?"

She hesitated.

"No," she said firmly, "no, I won't buy your piano to-day."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

RULE OF GOWFF

A story is told of two old antagonists who met on a Scotch golf course every Saturday afternoon.

On one occasion, when they were all "square" at the seventeenth, and the loser of the previous week had just played his third in the shape of a nice approach to the green, last week's winner came up to his ball with grim purpose. He had an easy pitch to the green, but a number of young sheep were unconcernedly browsing along the edge.

"Run forward, laddie," said last week's winner to his caddie, "and drive awa' the lambs!"

"Na, na!" vigorously protested his opponent. "Bide where ye be, laddie! Ye canna move any growin' thing! That's the rule o' gowff!"

She went to the desk against the wall and in a few moments presented the check triumphant, having written on its back

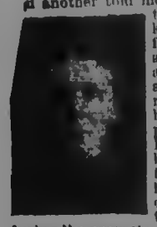
DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Canifton, Ont.—"I had been a great sufferer for five years. One doctor said me it was ulcers of the uterus, and another told me it was a fibroid tumor. No one knows what I suffered. I would always be worse at certain periods, and never was regular, and the bearing-down pains were terrible. I was very ill in bed, and the doctor told me I would have to have an operation, and that I might die during the operation. I wrote to my sister about it and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Through personal experience I have found it the best medicine in the world for female troubles, for it has cured me, and I did not have to have the operation after all. The Compound also helped me while passing through Change of Life."—Mrs. LETITIA BLAIR, Canifton, Ontario.



Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to suffering women

DAVID KNEW

At school David Bid great difficulty with his arithmetic problems, and his teacher tried in vain to make him understand. Finally, to bring the matter home, he said:

"If I should go into your father's shop and say I wanted two pounds of meat, and he had only a pound and a half, what would he do?"

The boy thought profoundly for a moment, and then said:

"He would make up the weight with his thumb!"

She—"So have I."

He—"So you guessed then that I wanted to tell you I love you."

NO CHANCE

There was a vacancy in a country church, and the deacon, in the old-fashioned way, drew up a short list of candidates, the chosen ones to preach before the congregation. One youthful aspirant preached what he considered an excellent sermon, and after the service endeavored to "draw" a venerable elder.

"Do you think that I have any chance, Mr. Watson?" he asked.

"No, I dinna," was the uncompromising reply.

"Surely, you don't mean that?" said the abashed youth. "I think you might get a far worse man that me for your pulpit."

The gruff old fellow looked him up and down and replied: "Whaur?"

GEORGEOUS DISPLAY FOR THE CORONATION

Preparations are Being Made for a Great Demonstration When George V. is Crowned

Already the arrangements are well in hand for the coronation of King George, which takes place on Wednesday, June 21st, next year.

From now until the date set both the Lord Chamberlain and the Earl Marshal's departments, in fact, every official of the Royal Household, will be working at high pressure. The word has gone forth that nothing must be wanting to make the event worthy of the Empire and of the historic greatness of the occasion.

All the gorgeous trappings of State, the Royal and other regalia, which lends to the crowning of a British King so much stately splendor, are now being examined and made ready.

Already the coming event is casting its glories before, and in many unexpected quarters there is now a bustle of activity which will not cease until after next June.

Already scores of rooms have been engaged at the big hotels, and hundreds of passengers have been booked on the great steamship routes from all parts of the world. This information was given out at one of the big hotels and by the manager of one of the oldest tourist agencies, who remarked: "London will next year be the capital, not of the British Empire only, but of the world. From the universal inquiries we are receiving I am convinced that there will be such a crowd as even London has never seen before."

The Coronation will bring to this country a considerable number of Royal personages from the courts of Europe, though, of course, no reigning monarch ever attends a coronation.

SUICIDE IN RUSSIA

Self-Destruction Appallingly Frequent Amongst the Students in the Czar's Domain

The prevalence of suicide in Russia at present is only one of many symptoms of the depression which set in as a reaction after the feverish excitement of the years 1905 and 1906, and the fact that cases of suicide have become painfully frequent amongst pupils of secondary schools and students of universities and other higher educational institutions is perhaps partly to be explained by the extraordinary intensity with which the general reaction both in temper and government has manifested itself in schools and colleges.

The estimated number of suicides in Russian educational institutions was in 1908, 312, and in 1909, 419 or 761 in two years. The figures for the previous years are 1904, twenty; 1905, forty-seven; 1906, seventy-one; 1907, 112.

As to the causes of suicide it is estimated that about a third of the cases have their origin in certain conditions of school life. The Czar has become so worried about this suicidal tendency that he has appointed a commission to investigate.

HUMBLED AN ACTRESS

A Nobleman's Valet Saw a Chance to Make Money and Took It

Here is a story which is being told in Paris concerning a Russian nobleman, an actress, and a valet. After visiting a theatre, the nobleman sent his valet with a bouquet for the leading actress, not because he was specially "smitten," but because he considered it the thing to do.

Thinking no more about the lady, the Russian was preparing to leave Paris, when the actress called upon him. "I have come to thank you," she said, "for your incessant and delicate attentions." "You are extremely kind," replied he, modestly, "as I only sent you one bouquet and that a month ago, if I remember rightly." "Why," exclaimed the lady, "your servant has brought me one every evening."

When the valet was asked to explain, he said, "When I took the first bouquet the lady gave me five francs, and as it only cost me three, I went on doing it."

ELABORATE EAR-RINGS

Paris Has Taken to the Ornaments, But They are Expensive

The wearing of ear-rings is the latest "cry" in Paris, and the windows of the smartest jewelers' shops are filled with exquisite designs of this ear adornment. They are the rage, and because of that fact promise soon to become common, when fashion will no doubt quickly abandon their use. One gorgeous set consists of a magnificent single white pearl and an equally fine black specimen, one of each being contained in each earring. The pearls in each earring were suspended by a chain one inch long, made of diamonds interwoven in the form of a graduated wreath of roses. The price of this beautiful specimen of the jeweler's art was up in the thousands.

SENOR THEOPHILE BRAGA
President of the new Portuguese Republic

IS ANXIOUS FOR THE POLITICAL FRAY

Joseph Chamberlain Has Greatly Improved in Health and May Return to Parliament

Interesting beyond the ordinary as the short autumn session of Parliament promises to be, there may be a dramatic surprise in store for the House of Commons.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, who has made some slight, but definite, progress towards recovery, is known to cherish a strong determination to take his seat at Westminster, and intervene in debate at the earliest possible moment.

He has entertained many personal friends at Highbury of late, and they have each and all come away with a clear impression that there is a marked improvement in the health of the right hon. gentleman. He has been able to sustain conversation. His speech, though still slow, has greatly gained in distinctness. For some time past he has personally dealt with his heavy correspondence, keeping his devoted wife and private secretary incessantly occupied in turn with his answers to multifarious correspondents.

It is quite generally believed that Mr. Chamberlain has largely resumed the direction of the "Tariff Reform" movement, and that every important step taken by the Tariff League has the imprimatur of the author of the propaganda.

When he returned to Birmingham for his present stay at Highbury, it was noticed that he piloted his way at the railway station, through the crowd of passengers and the piles of luggage, with little or no assistance from Mrs. Chamberlain, himself leading the way to his carriage. For those who remembered his previous home-coming, this was a surprising sight, and the improvement, very gradual though it be, which has steadily gone on ever since to the present day is a wonderful tribute both to the care and skill of his physicians and nurses and the extraordinary recuperative powers of the right hon. gentleman himself.

The belief that he will be able to take his seat in the House of Commons and the determination to again participate in its proceedings are Mr. Chamberlain's own. Among his more intimate friends he makes no secret of his heart's desire. Those who know the implacable resolution of the right hon. gentleman will scarcely need to be reminded that only the obstacle of absolute physical incapacity will prevent the realization.

Apart from the disabilities imposed upon him by his prolonged illness, however, there is the significant fact that Mr. Chamberlain is beyond the three-score years and ten of normal activity, and that, had he retained unimpaired his natural vigor up till now, the time of its abating would be near at hand. Therefore, however keen the determination of so doughty a political gladiator to return again to the Parliamentary tourney in which he was for so long a conspicuous figure, there are grave grounds for questioning whether it is in the least possible in the nature of things.

The career of William Pitt, it may be recalled, has had an especial fascination for Mr. Chamberlain, who is credited with observing some personal resemblance himself to that great Parliamentarian of another day and generation. If the tragic disappearance of Pitt from Parliament should be matched by a dramatic retirement of his own political career, even that might not be out of keeping with the dreams of a statesman who has frankly entertained great ambitions.

Whether his highest hopes and expectations are or are not realized, it may be taken for granted that the "Tariff Reform" leader will play no small or inactive part in the approaching struggle of parties.

NO DELAY

Tenderfoot—"I understand that justice is meted out quickly in these parts?"

Westerner—"Quickly! Why, pard, at the street carnival last week an aeronaut who fell out of his balloon was tried and sentenced to six months in jail before he hit the ground."

Tenderfoot—"Incredible! What was the charge?"

Westerner—"Vagrancy. He had no visible means of support."

Alice: "You probably will; most ocean travellers do."

FORBIDDEN TO MARRY

Hungarian Princess Must Not Wed Her German Fiance

The Hungarian Princess Sulkowska, daughter of a prince owning property worth near $8,000,000, has been forbidden by her official Hungarian guardians to wed her German fiance, Count von Schmettow, on the ground that the latter is a pauper, though his father's fortune amounts to $1,250,000. Prince Sulkowska's extravagance led to himself and his daughter becoming wards of the Court which manages property cases. Count Schmettow has exhausted his own portion of his patrimony, and receives no more until his father's death. Thus, two heirs of nearly ten millions between them haven't funds enough to start the simplest house-keeping, and the wedding, which was to be a big social event, has been stopped. However, big German bankers have arranged for the finances of the Court sufficiently for him to hope to overcome the Court's objections, and to enable the loving couple to unite.

WAGES OF ACTORS

Four-Fifths of German Players Average $1,500 a Year

Four-fifths of the ten thousand actors and actresses of Germany earn an average of $1,500 a year. The statement is made by the German Stage Association as a warning to the crowd of young people of both sexes who, as usual at the beginning of the theatrical year, are knocking more or less courageously at the doors of Thespis. The association numbers 25,000 members, of whom three-fifths are singers, musicians, supers and stage hands. Of the actors and actresses only a fifth earn what can be called a decent living, the highest salary being about $2,750 a year. The remainder earn from $20 to $47.50 a month, but are employed for only seven months in the year. Out of their income they have to pay travelling expenses, wardrobe and agents' fees, after deducting which, all that remains on an average is $150 a year. One-fifth of the theatrical profession is always in dire need, without employment and without resources. On the operatic stage the conditions are still worse. Better salaries are paid, but the greater severity of competition more than neutralizes this advantage. The belief common abroad that owing to the system of subsidized theatres with stock companies the German actor is sure of steady if not extremely remunerative employment is shown by the association's report to be incorrect. There are only about twenty-five such theatres in the whole of Germany and Austria.

NO TIME TO LOSE

At a draper's shop in Leeds they employed a small boy to run errands. The other day while he was waiting in the shop a lady came in and asked the shop-assistant for a yard of silk. When it was placed in front of her she exclaimed:

"Oh, really, I must be mad. I want muslin."

On hearing this the boy rushed out of the shop, and, seeing a policeman across the way, ran up to him, shouting:

"Come over quick, there's a girl in our shop gone mad. She wants muzzling."

Great Pageant In Old London

The Lord Mayor's Show on Wednesday Next Will be a Remarkable Spectacle

A pageant of the kings, princes, nobles, and other characters in Shakespeare's plays is to form the chief feature of the Lord Mayor's show on Wednesday next, when Sir Vezey Strong, the new Lord Mayor, makes his formal procession through the City. The procession will probably be the longest that has ever wended through the City, as 2,000 people will take part. In the Shakespeare section alone, which Mr. Philip Parr, secretary of the Shakespeare Memorial Committee will organize, 150 characters are to appear, fully 100 of them mounted. The idea of the Shakespearean pageant is to represent the characters as they appear in scenes laid in London City. So on November 9th Londoners will see Henry VIII. riding with the great cardinal. On the way to Southampton for the wars in France Henry V., with his captains and soldiers, was cheered by the citizens of London, and they may do so again when he goes with the new Lord Mayor. Richard III. and the two young princes will also be there and that old London vagabond, Sir John Falstaff, will once again proceed along the highway with his company of rogues as he did upon his many exits from the Boar's Head Tavern in Eastcheap, where Mistress Quickly made so good a hostess. The Shakespeare pageant, however, is to be but a part of the big show. The military portion will be imposing. Every city unit in the Territorial Force will be represented by a strong detachment. There is in addition to be a Boy Scout's section.

HOLLAND FORTIFYING

The Belgians are Concerned Because Antwerp Would be Isolated In Event of War

Public opinion in Belgium is somewhat occupied with the project recently made public in Holland of fortifying the mouth of the Scheldt. The expenditure foreseen by the Dutch Government for this object amounts to 40 million florins, the greater part of which is being devoted to the construction of a fort near Flushing.

The Belgians are concerned at this plan, as one of its consequences would be to isolate Antwerp in the event of war. People here have always reckoned that the Belgian commercial metropolis - namely, Antwerp - could always be within the friendly reach of the British fleet should a European war break out. But with a double range of fortifications on the Scheldt, Antwerp would be at the mercy of any Continental invader. The project of fortifying the Scheldt has therefore produced a disagreeable impression in Belgium, and has naturally shattered any further hope of a Belgian-Dutch rapprochement, planned three or four years ago. The project of fortifying the Scheldt has definitely disposed of the projected entente.

A ROBBER MONK

Despoiled a Famous Shrine and Murdered His Brother Who Helped Him

In the famous church at Czenstochau, in Russian Poland, to which thousands of pilgrims annually resort, a sensational theft has occurred. A picture of the Madonna, alleged to be endowed with miraculous gifts, has been stripped of its jewels. A few days ago at Cracow, a monk, named Dannez Mazzoh, was arrested in connection with the theft and suspected murder. Although no jewels were found upon him, it was alleged that he had killed his brother, who was his accomplice in the theft. The brother, struck with remorse, had determined to confess to the authorities, to prevent which, it is said, the monk, with the connivance of his brother's wife, murdered him, after giving his absolution.

After inviting him to his cell, the monk made his brother drunk, and then despatched him with blows on the head, put the body in an old sofa, and sank it in a neighboring pond, making the driver of the droschky swear never to betray him. As fears, however, haunted him, he fled over the frontier.

A VALUABLE FIND

An Old Picture, Unearthed at Liverpool, Proves to be Worth Thousands

A valuable picture, believed to be a genuine Murillo, which has just come into the possession of a Liverpool Roman Catholic priest, has a remarkable history. It is a painting of the Madonna, and has without doubt been in Liverpool for at least 150 years. It was for eighty years the property of an art and curio dealer living in what at that time was the Spanish quarter of Liverpool.

When the dealer died the son sold the picture to a friend, an Orangeman. When the religious riots were at their height in Liverpool he decided that he would not keep the picture in his house any longer, and it was again offered for sale.

Father Jeanrenaud, rector of the Roman Catholic Oratory of St. Philip Neri, hearing that the picture was to be sold, went to see it, and, impressed with its beauty, which was apparent in spite of its great age, made an offer and became the owner for a comparatively small sum.

The canvas was nailed to an old wooden frame, and was very much soiled. One day, while examining the picture, Father Jeanrenaud found the initials "E.B." cut on the back of the frame. The letters had obviously been put there many years ago, and, thinking that the picture might be valuable, the priest invited an expert to see it. The gentleman after examining the canvas, came to the conclusion that it was a genuine Murillo, and Father Jeanrenaud formed the opinion that the initials on the frame were those of Bartholme Esteban Murillo.

In the opinion of a prominent artist the canvas is worth $10,000.

MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY

Professor Pogson Became Exhausted, Fell in the Snow and Expired

Another tragedy of the Switzerland mountains has occurred. Professor S. M. Pogson, of Oxford and Brighton, accompanied by a guide named Coutet and a porter named Charlet, left the Grands Mulets hut, Mont Blanc, in fine but very cold weather recently. Against the advice of the guides, Professor Pogson, although exhausted, insisted upon ascending. When within five minutes of the summit he fell senseless in the snow. He was carried to the refuge at Vallot, and there died. The guides descended to Chammonix, and a rescue party which left the next night descended the following day with the body. The whole drama was watched through telescopes at Chammonix.

A TRAGEDY IN FRANCE

An English Boy Visiting in Calais is Mysteriously Shot

London, Oct. 22.—An eight-year-old English boy named Edgar Catling, who was spending a holiday with his parents at Calais, was shot dead under the most tragic circumstances.

Mr. Catling, the boy's father, a member of a firm of ironmasters, of Nottingham, was riding a bicycle along the Sangatte road. He was riding very slowly in order to keep pace with his little son, who was running by his side.

Suddenly the child cried out and fell to the ground dead. His father [illegible] and found that he had been shot through the lungs. The police have so far been unable to find out where the bullet came from.

There is a shooting gallery not far from the spot where the accident occurred.

NOT AN ARCHITECT

Berlin, Oct. 22. The Kaiser is always unlucky when he meddles in architectural matters. The last instance, according to the Berlin Press, is his intervention during the construction of the new bridge which was recently opened over the Rhine at Cologne. This bridge, by the way, is decorated with an equestrian statue of the Kaiser himself, the first that has yet been erected.

The bridge is flanked by four towers. The architect intended these to be of equal height, but the Kaiser went over the designs and insisted that the two down-stream towers should be higher than those facing up-stream. This expensive alteration was duly carried out, but the effect is so unfortunate that the experts, as well as the ordinary public, agree that the plan must again be altered and the two high towers reduced to the level of the others.

A FIRE-FROOF CASTLE

London, Oct. 22. Some of the apartments at Windsor have recently been provided with steel doors, which are cleverly painted and grained in imitation oak, and are hung upon their hinges so nicely that they may be swung to and fro as easily as if they were fashioned of timber. It is likely that this precaution against fire and other dangers will be extended to other parts of the Castle. English royal residences have hitherto been singularly free from outbreak of fire, but the King recognizes the important responsibilities that devolve upon him as the custodian of the Crown property, and means to adopt every device that experience suggests for safeguarding property and life in the royal precincts.

CUPID'S WIG AND GOWN

BY TOM GALLON

"Mr. Kenshaw to-day Saturday," read the boy as near as though all Chancery Lane was acting its traditional part on this occasion, same as the doctors they fetch out to sketch an oddity to read the symptoms to the crowd on their patient.

But other gentlemen were learning to talk to the Judges what do they now.

They stands up smooth, like this, see—the boy threw himself into an attitude, with one hand thrust into the breast of his small jacket—an they say: May it please yer Lordship I appears for So-and-so an the other side-demno were they are or summink to that effect."

Do you know anything about this case?" asked Phyllis. "It is now fifteen minutes past ten o'clock, and Mr. Kenshaw should be in Court at the half hour."

"Well, it went on as it is now and a rush there'll be on the evenin' papers," suggested the boy. "Wot of it, Miss?"

"If you can tell me, in five minutes, what the case is all about and how I have to begin and anything that's useful I'll give you anything you like to ask for. You see a friend of mine is going to take the case just to help Mr. Kenshaw."

At that moment a voice from the inner room cried out, in a sort of weak roar: "Skipper!"

"That's me," exclaimed the boy, and disappeared through the doorway. Phyllis, listening and longing, heard but a few words of what passed inside.

"Skipper—my wig and gown. I've got to get up. Skipper, I've got to win the case and win something else at the same time. If only this head of mine would keep still! Give me my wig and gown!"

"They 'opped the case out, guv'nor," said the boy earnestly. "They was very esc anxious you should tell 'em what you thought of 'em that they wouldn't go on. They've put it orf for a week."

"That's good, Skipper—that's fine!" came the weak voice from the inner room. "I'll be all right in a week right as rain!"

The boy came out into the room again, and closed the door. "Worn't to sleep like a lamb," he began, and then suddenly started back, and cried out.

Before him stood Miss Phyllis Holt, in an altogether momentous dress. Her bright hair had been twisted up and tied flat to her head, and the very new barrister's wig was settled firmly over it. The gown was drawn over her shoulders, and fell over her dark dress; in that uncertain look she looked a very presentable, although rather young, member of the Junior Bar.

"Now, Skipper, sit down, and tell me as rapidly as possible what I have to do; then take me into Court, and show me where I am to sit. Don't stare at me like that, Skipper."

Phyllis was half crying, but very resolute. "You've got to help me and to help Mr. Kenshaw."

Naturally, Master Skipper knew the case by heart, in fact, his master had practised upon him one or two rather fine speeches, on more than one occasion. So they went at it hammer and tongs, until the hand of the little clock on the mantelpiece pointed to the half hour. Then Phyllis sprang up, and pulled her gown about her, and prepared to set out.

"I am glad I went in for the Bar!" exclaimed Skipper, as they prepared to start. "Didn't know there was all so much fun in it. No, Miss, you don't put nothink on your head—you goes across just like you are. Lucky it's foggy—might be the middle of the night."

How Phyllis ever got into the Court at all she scarcely knew. She had a dim vision of a stern-looking gentleman in a wig, seated far away above her, and seeming to fix his eyes intently upon her face; she found herself, trembling and shrinking, seated among several barristers who were whispering together, before her eyes was a very large man, in a wig and gown, pressing away at great length upon something she did not in the least understand. The gentleman in the wig above her spoke shortly and sharply for a moment or two, and there was a movement in Court; then she understood that that particular case was finished. Then someone called out "Smith v. Electric Syndicate," and, catching the eye of the attendant Skipper, she got to her feet with something hard and painful beating in her temples.

"May it please your lordship I appear—that is to say—"

Someone else was speaking, which was just as well, perhaps. For the Court seemed to spinning round and round, and the Judge to be dancing up and down from the Bench to the ceiling. As the new barrister fell back, the strange thing was that a strong and friendly arm went round the stuff gown, and a voice she knew spoke in her ear.

"It's all right play the game a moment longer, little woman, and we'll get you over comfortably."

The other speaker had applied for an adjournment certain evidence had not yet been collected. The Judge cleared his throat of the fog and peered down to where the barristers were sitting.

"I regret to say, m'lud, that my learned friend, Mr. Kenshaw is overcome with faintness, and quite unable to proceed. He raises no objection whatever to the adjournment." Of course, it was all part of the faintness, but Phyllis had a curious feeling that the man who spoke on her behalf had the voice of John Medlow. More than that, it was the voice of John Medlow again that whispered in her ear to have courage, as she got out of Court, supported strongly in his arm.

John said never a word, until they were back again in Gilbert Kenshaw's chambers. Then he laughed, and sat down something ridiculously complimentary, and then he laughed again. "Lucky I happened to be next to you," he said.

"But it wasn't any good, after all," said Phyllis, with a little sob.

"Wasn't it? Why, you've got the case adjourned the very thing you wanted. You've helped Gilbert immensely; this'll put him on his legs."

"You don't really mean that?"

"Don't I? Don't take off that wig, go in and see him just as you are. Tell him you've been fighting a battle for him; tell him what you've done. Above all," he dropped a hand on her shoulder as he spoke, "tell him what you mean to do; don't stand any nonsense from him."

He opened the door of the inner room, then gently thrust her in; then closed the door again. And the curious thing has to be recorded that from that hour Mr. Gilbert Kenshaw began to get well, and the still more curious fact that when a fortnight later, he appeared in Court, he won his case, and won it well. And Phyllis Holt sat not among the barristers this time, and listened, and was probably the proudest and happiest little woman in England.

THE BURNING LEAVES

Such scented censer smoke it weaves
Up with the burning autumn leaves
And trails away in aimless style
While lazy breezes loiter on
And though each wondrous golden while
Of all the summer-time is gone
We do not sigh as one who grieves
When drifts the scent of burning leaves.

It is as cinnamon and musk
And mint and myrrh that scent the dusk
And pungent clove, and nutmeg, too,
And allspice buds—all deftly blent
And intermingled through and through
With berries of the Orient
So do we stand and know all these
As echoes of our memories.

So does the smoke that drifts away
Bring back each singing summer day
And make us see the wide, blue sky
With ivory clouds that slowly sail
Across the sea that is on high
With soaring birds to give them hail
And forest shades and laughing streams
And all the wondrous stuff-of-dreams.
And as the smoke-wreath lifts and veers
It takes us down the path of years
Through other summers, other springs,
Until we live again the days
That had been with forgotten things,
Until we tread again the ways
Long since grown dim as is the dusk
Where drift the spice and mint and musk

Such scented censer smoke—it weaves
Up from the blazing autumn leaves,
And yonder trees become tall spires
And streets become cathedral aisles
Illumed by fitful altar fires
And through it all there glints and gleams
The glory of our olden dreams.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is rich in the lung-healing virtues of the Norway pine tree. It is a pleasant, safe and effectual medicine that may be confidentially relied upon as a specific for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Quinsy, and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

Mrs. J. A. Smith, Marshville, Ont., writes: "I had a very bad cough and that distressing tickling sensation in my throat. It was so bad I could not sleep at night and my lungs were so sore I had to give up work.

"Our doctor gave me medicine but it did me no good, so I got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and by the time I had used two bottles I was entirely cured. I am always recommending it to my friends."

KILLED HIS BOYHOOD FRIEND

PARIS, OCT. 28.—A crime that surpasses anything in the history of Canadian feuds was perpetrated recently at St. Enogat. It was the culmination of simple schoolboys' fight which occurred twenty-six years ago. The victim had forgotten all about it. The assassin, one Peskin, chanced upon his victim, a man named Gatebois. The recollections of Gatebois were of the most friendly description. He could not make sufficient of the individual who struggled with himself to master the three R's. He gave him a good dinner and showed him over his shop, and introduced him to many of his friends. The unsuspicious Gatebois had him again to lunch. They chatted and joked and then went into the garden.

Peskin suddenly drew a revolver. "You brute," he shrieked. "Do you remember what you did to me twenty-six years ago?"

Before Gatebois could reply Peskin fired, and as his old comrade fell, smashed his skull with the revolver.

Neighbors who had heard the shot took the man prisoner.

Gatebois was taken to the hospital, where he died the same night. Peskin remained cool.

"Twenty-six years ago," he said, "that man struck me when I was defenceless. I have been waiting a chance to revenge myself."

A SAD STORY

A sad story is told of an old woman of 82, known in Vaughton, where she lived, as Mother Trote, who was found early a few mornings since lying on the pavement on a pool of blood with her skull fractured. She used to stroll round the houses talking to the neighbors, who knew her well. Leaning heavily on a stick she would stand and talk about her daughter, who died at the age of twenty whilst bathing.

"The lady in blue who stands up there ever a morning at daybreak," she would say. "She stands on the roof opposite my window. She is beautiful. Her feet are white, her hair is of gold, and her blue robe is just like a moon ray. They say she died many years ago, but I still see her. She beckons to me, and one of these emornings I shall go to her."

The poor woman kept her word. She apparently managed to get on to the roof. No doubt she saw her beloved vision. Towards it she stretched her withered hands went forward, and fell into the road beneath and to death.

AMERICAN HOLD-UP MEN

A gang of American hold-up men are operating in this city under the leadership of of a noted English crook. Mademoiselle Bertrand had a disagreeable experience with them recently. She is a handsome woman with a great weakness for jewellery, with which she bedecks herself about audibly before leaving home for a stroll to the music halls of Montmartre. The other evening she stalked into a cafe near the Moulin rouge. Her diamonds literally blazed and her magnificence at once caught the attention of flour young men who were at supper. With little or no ceremony an acquaintance was struck up and in a few minutes Mlle Bertrand was seated with the joyous party.

They were Americans, they told Mlle Bertrand, and as they spoke French with some difficulty Mlle Bertrand saw no reason to disbelieve them. On the contrary, she congratulated herself on having found what was certainly a party of those multi-millionaires. After supper a cab bore them to a dancing establishment, where champagne flowed freely.

When the night was over Mlle Bertrand was shown to her room by her new acquaintances. Hardly were they inside the room, however, than she was seized and gagged by two of the men, while the other two took her jewellery and purse. Her cries soon brought assistance, and Mlle Bertrand gave a description of her assailants to the police. Three of the men were captured a few hours later, and were identified as belonging to a band of road agents who have lately been acting profitably in the Montmartre quarter.

TALKED TO CHIMPANZEE

The other day as twenty working girls came out of a dressmaker's shop in the Rue Boileau at midday, an ape encircled the waist of one of them.

The girl protested vigorously. The ungallant intruder was well dressed, but he was a hideous little person.

The girls began making fun of him when suddenly he caught hold of one and put his face close against hers. She boxed his ears and he dropped on all fours and bit her leg.

There was a panic. The girls rushed off shrieking, and two policemen arrested the aggressor. The creature was a chimpanzee, the pet of an exploiter living near at hand. He was captured after a struggle, and carried off by his master's cook, who went to fetch him at the police station, where he had spent the night.

An amusing item of the story is that the organ-grinder got very angry with the chimpanzee when he was first brought in because he refused to answe rany questions. He was highly indignant when told that he was talking to a chimpanzee. His honour was near-sighted and did not know that.

This Home-Made Cough Syrup will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes sixteen ounces—a family supply. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

MILLIONS ATTENDED BIG LEAGUE GAMES

A grand total of 7,279,175 persons witnessed the combined games of the National and American Baseball leagues during the season just closed, just 98,95 less than in 1909. The decrease occurred in the American league, the aNtional showing an increase over 190 904 54,782. Ban Johnson's organization showed a falling off of 153,733 from 1909. This falling off is due partly to the early settlement of the American league race, a thing a foregone conclusion tho the Athletics would win a month before the close of the season. The National league outdrew the American by 105,183. Last season the American outdrew the National by more than 100,000.

Since the American league expanded East in 1901 it has outdrawn the National six times, while the National has outdrawn the American four times. The Boston Americans carried off the individual honours, drawing 740,250 persons, an average of 10,953 to a game. Chicago Nationals were a close second, with a total of 730,963. New York Nationals were third, with a total of 628,000, and the Athletics fourth, with a total of 607,000. The Athletics outdrew the Phillies 236,785, averaging 8,438 to a game, while the Phillies drew an average of 5,358. The Athletics did not draw as well the past season as the yeid in 1909, showing a decrease of 67,315. The Phillies did better, showing an increase of 56,566. Four cities in the American league Boston, New York, Chicago, and Washington showed an increase, while Athletics, Detroit, St. Louis, and Cleveland fell behind.

Five cities in the National Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and Brooklyn did better than in 1909, while New York, Boston, and Pittsburg fell off. As a road team Hughey Jennings's Detroit team has them all beaten, drawing 630,461, showing Hughey's popularity. McGraw's New York Nationals were the next best drawing team on the road, with a total of 577,724. While the majority of the Western clubs have an advantage with Sunday games, the East has outdrawn the West by 51,735. The Eastern clubs outdrew the Western in the American league, while the West outdrew the East in the aNtional.

THE EDITOR'S APPEAL

A prominent citizen, who knows a good thing when he sees it, has handed in the following pathetic appeal of a North Dakota editor to his delinquent subscribers: "It is reported that one of Harvey's tastidious newly married ladies kneads bread with her gloves on. The incident may be somewhat unusual, but there are others. The editor of this paper needs bread with his shoes on; he needs bread with his shirt on; he needs bread with his pants on, and unless some of the delinquent subscribers of this rag of freedom pay up before long he will need bread without a damn thing on, and oNrth Dakota is no Garden of Eden this time of the year."

AFTER GOTCH

New York, Nov. 4.—In some respects the heavyweight wrestling situation resembles the boxing field. The ma champion, Gotch, is not being besieged with challenges from every town and country, but there two men now actvie who claim that they are justified in asking for a match. They occupy about the same places in regard to the wrestling title as do Kaufman and Langford in the pugilistic field. Perhaps Hackenschmidt and the Indian wrestler Gama have more enthusiastic backers than the two boxers.

At any rate, both the Russian and the Indian have signified their intention of coming to this country in the winter and seking a match with Gotch. A regul arreport creeps forth in dull times that the champion has retired, sometimes it goes ignored and frequently the monotony is still further varied by an immediate denial.

If Gama and Hackenschmidt come here this winter some city should see an interesting bout. Before either of them draws Gotch into an encounter they will probably be matched against each other. Hackenschmidt was in Australia last winter. A report states that a California fight promoter cabled to a Russian saying that he has discured Gotch's consent to a match.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES

King George has issued a proclamation naming the date of the coronation as June 22.

S. Leslie, a railway news agent, was arrested at Bracebridge on a charge of stealing a Pole of $350.

The Duke of Connaught, in his speech at the official dinner at Cape Town, predicted a bright future for South Africa.

The Toronto Electric Light Co. issued a writ against the city, claiming damages and injunction to restrain the construction of the Hydro-electric power line.

The Stock brothers, missing at Milhaven, near Kingston, thought to have been drowned, arrived home safely. They had to take shelter on an island for four days.

By the sudden freezing over of Lake Winnipeg most of the fleet of steamers have been caught in the ice, and the crews will be compelled to abandon them for the winter.

Rodolphe Forget, M.P., the eminent financier, left Montreal last evening for Paris on business connected with the many issues in which he has interested French capitalists.

A nugget of zinc, weighing 91 1-2 pounds, was found by Dr. Woolverton of London during his prospecting operations on the Bruce Peninsula, a few miles north of Wiarton, on Saturday.

Suspect Incendiarism.

Welland, Nov. 8.—The firemen, returning at four o'clock yesterday morning from a fire which destroyed the house of Harry Robbins, discovered that Cutler's planing mill was on fire. Owing to the inflammable nature of the contents and the building, nothing could be done to save the property. The loss is $15,000, on which there is an insurance of $3,000.

The barn of the Whalley House was also discovered to be on fire, and the chief of police suspects an incendiary has been at work, as no cause can be ascertained for the fires.

At midnight Sunday three houses were burned in Cainsville, near Humberstone, and yesterday Mrs. Samuel Sloat, James Doan and Frank Vanbinder are homeless. Very little of the contents were saved, and the inmates of the Sloat home were rescued only with difficulty. Mrs. Sloat was considerably burned about the face. The total loss will run about $5,000.

Poison In the Wine.

Vancouver, Nov. 8. Louis Iansnersy is dead. Emil Delasher and Henri Cachett are in the General Hospital and John Daur is either dead or a fugitive from the police, as the result of a drinking bout in Vancouver early yesterday morning, in which poison is said to have figured.

The four Frenchmen met in a house in Fairview, and among the drinks consumed was a bottle of port wine, which is believed by the police to have contained strychnine. When the police were called to the house they found the dead body of Iansnersy, and Delasher and Cachett were so nearly dead that it was at first thought little could be done for them at the hospital. They are not, however, out of danger.

Daur was missing when the police searched the house, and a general call has been sent out for his arrest, the police believing he is still alive.

Must Provide for Insane.

Brandon, Nov. 8.—This city will be compelled to find accommodation for as many homeless patients of the asylum as are allowed to remain in Manitoba. Relief will be afforded, of course, by the removal of many to the new asylum at Ponoka. Unwillingness on the part of citizens to allow the Government to use the winter fair building in the centre of the city vanished when Hon. G. R. Coldwell acting Minister of Public Works, intimated that the institution might be removed from Brandon if the winter fair building were not turned over for the use of the patients.

Actors Now Have Real Union.

New York, Nov. 8.—Announcement was made last night of the consolidation of the White Rats of America and the Actors' National Union by Samuel Gompers, through whose efforts the union was affected. Negotiations for the conciliation had been in progress for two months.

The White Rats' Actors Union is the name chosen for the combined organization. It will affiliate with the American Federation. Heretofore the White Rats have had no connection with any labor organization.

Tailors to Close to Prevent Disorder.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Inability to detail policemen to preserve the peace at the many tailoring shops affected by the garment workers' strike, and at the same time to prevent disorders at the 1,322 polling places in Chicago on election day, compelled Chief of Police Steward yesterday to appeal to the clothing manufacturers to shut down their places of business. He said nearly all of the strike-bound places promised to comply.

No Postoffice Yet.

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 8.—Windsor will not have a new postoffice, for the present at least. There has been an agitation on foot for some time for the enlargement of the postoffice floor space, but work was started on the installation of new interior fittings, which it is said that the Government will allow for the present. These will entail an expenditure of about $7,000.

Elevator Workers' Strike.

Boston, Nov. 8.—A general strike of elevator constructors employed by the Otis Elevator Co. in various cities of the country became effective yesterday. The strike originated in Chicago over wages some time ago.

Marshall, who was unloading gravel was killed when his horses took fright on the approach of the doctor's auto. This was the first case decided under the new act of the Ontario Legislature, which laces the burden of proof on the automobilist to show that there was no negligence on his part. The jury in this case on questions submitted by Mr. Justice Latchford, said that the doctor didn't sound his horn soon enough to give adequate warning.

LOOKING FOR BELLE ELMORE IN HAMMOND, INDIANA, NOW

Mysterious Notes in a Hotel and Telephone Calls, Have Spurred the Police on and they are Exhausting Every Effort to Discover the Missing Woman if She Lives.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CHICAGO, NOV. 8—Search for Belle Elmore, for murdering whom whom Dr. Hawley Harvey Crippen, is sentenced to be hanged November 23rd, and who was reported to be a clue and in hiding near Chicago, centred to-day near Hammond, Ind. A mysterious note in the Virginian hotel here, mysterious telephone calls and the appearance recently in Hammond of a pretty woman who closely resembles Belle Elmore, have spurred the police to extraordinary efforts to locate the singer. Meantime, however, a report has gained currency among the sporting men that the story of Belle Elmore being alive and in Chicago is a "frame up" for theatrical purposes.

BETTING FAVOURS DIX FOR THE GOVERNORSHIP

Special to the Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., NOV. 8. The whole United States in general and the State of New York are in the throes of the fierce storm of the ballots today. There are Congressional elections all over the country and gubernatorial voting in this state and several others. Because of the Rooseveltian anger in governor-ship pie of this empire state, more interest is taken in the outcome of the election here than anything else. This morning Roosevelt rather disappointed his followers by predicting only twenty-five thousand majority for Stimson the Republican, whereas the Democrat are cocksure of a hundred thousand for their man Dix. Wall street brokers, who are taking more interest in ballots than bonds, declare that three hundred thousand dollars are being gambled in New York alone on the result of the vote for governor. The odds generally at ten o'clock were two and a half to three in favour of Dix.

BADLY HURT WHILE DUCK SHOOTING---MAN IS IN THE HOSPITAL

Mr. Wm. Wormswart of Arden, Ont., was brought to the city on the 4.38 C.P.R. train last night and conveyed to Nicholl's Hospital in Bellcher's ambulance. He was dangerously injured while duck hunting near Arden. It appears that he was about a mile from his destination when the accident occurred. His gun was lying with the muzzle toward him in the bottom of the canoe and he went to pick it up to shoot at a flock of ducks which were passing over when by some mischance the trigger got caught and caused the gun to go off, the charge of the shot entering Mr. Wormswart's arm near the shoulder. The unfortunate man paddled to the landing place with one arm and then walked to the station a distance of about a mile where he caught a train for Peterborough. Dr. Maher, of Twomey temporarily treated the injury while the train waited at that station. And Dr. Eastwood, who attended him here, found it necessary to amputate the arm here last night. Owing to the shock and exposure, as well as the loss of blood, his recovery is a matter of doubt.

Young Man Found Guilty Of Theft Let Go On Suspended Sentence

Fred Sullivan, a young man of this city, appeared before His Honour Judge Hayden yesterday afternoon, a plea was given at the preliminary of tobacco, cigars and candy from the store of Jame Elgar. The prisoner pleaded not guilty, but the evidence which was practically the same as was given at the preliminary hearing was of a convincing character and his Honour found the accused guilty. However he allowed him to go on suspended sentence. Crown Attorney R. E. Wood conducted the prosecution, and Mr. G. S. Gordon defended the prisoner.

Public notice is hereby given that under the First Part of chapter 79 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, known as "The Companies Act," letters patent have been issued under the Seal of the Secretary of State of Canada, bearing date the 3rd day of November, 1910, incorporating Rennie Ogilvie McMurtry, advocate, Francis George Bush, bank-keeper, George Robert Dremmn, stenographer, Herbert William Jackson and Michael Joseph O'Brien, clerks, all of the city of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, for the following purposes, viz.: (a) To manufacture, buy, sell and deal in carpets, rugs mats, and other articles of a similar character. (b) To purchase and take over the business and assets generally, real and personal, including the good-will of the business heretofore carried on in Canada by the Brinton Carpet Company of Canada, Limited with head office at Kidderminster, England.

The Examiner inquired at the local office of the Brinton Carpet Company this morning as to whether there was a possibility of the business being moved from Peterborough, but was informed that Mr. Wadeley was out of the city and that there was no one authorized to give out any information as to the transaction.

It is learned that representatives of the Montreal firm were here last week looking over the plant of the Brinton Company.

WARSAW HUNTER HAS BAD ATTACK OF BUCK FEVER

Tells His Experience With a Deer That Came Within a Few Feet of Him that he Could Not Shoot---An Experience that is Being Duplicated Many Times in Hunting Camps

Warsaw, Ont., Nov. 8. The man who has had stage fright when face to face with a big buck doesn't very often tell his experience around the evening camp-fire. But nevertheless a story has leaked out about a young alleged hunter well known to many in the village which illustrates the helplessness of the average person when he first sets eyes upon the fleet footed monarch of the wilds.

The youth in question decided to locate on the summit of a big rock close to a runway while his companions watched the water front. Not long after the dogs were freed it was plain to everyone that there was a deer on the run. As good fortune would have it, the course selected was straight for the rock where watched the young hunter with a .38.55 across his knee. He could hear the brush beneath its feet crackle with every bound. Nearer and near it came and the moment it hove into view there was a sharp rifle report. But did the deer tumble? Not quite.

The natural nerve was to pump another shell into the barrel but a cloud passed over his mind and nothing seemed to work right. In another second or two the animal was within five yards of him, and, raising the stock of the rifle over his shoulder, he flung it with all the speed he could muster after the vanishing "meteor".

That ended the hunt, of course, for such opportunities don't usually knock at one's door twice in the same day. The disconcerted hunter believes to this minute that the bullet fired went straight up into the air. This is an actual occurrence and serves to show the bewilderment one is usually into before he becomes a full fledged hunte reapable of rationally sorting out each consecutive movement.

A UNION TO DEVELOP POWER IS PROPOSED

The following is from the Port Hope Guide.

Monday the Commissioners of Industries for Peterborough phoned the Mayor that there were power facilities in that district that could be cheaply developed and suggested that the several towns form a municipal union to exploit them. He said under this plan electric power could be developed in Bowmanville at a cost not exceeding $15 per horse power. A meeting may be held in the near future Bowmanville Review.

The proposition of the Commissioners of Peterborough, Mr. Dugeon is for the municipalities to purchase the Burleigh Falls and Buckhorn Falls powers which are owned by the Central Ontario Power Co. Limited and also a small power which is available near Peterborough, and operate them together as a municipal power union, and thus get power and lighting in the district at cost price. The municipalities would not of course expect a dividend on the investment. In the meantime the Central Ontario Power Co. are getting out their engineering plans after the recent surveys so that there will be no delay in delivering power. But while the company has a large amount of capital already subscribed by the manufacturers and people of the lake front district, a still greater amount has yet to be advanced to complete this great development and transmission undertaking to the municipalities concerned, namely, Peterborough, Lindsay, Port Hope, Cobourg, Bowmanville, Oshawa and Whitby.

The municipalities in getting hold of these powers would keep control of the situation for the people for all time to come, and thus put it beyond the possibility of the district being throttled from getting cheap light and power. (Editor Guide.)

Pastor Says There Is Too Much Feminine Jealousy In The Church

We have always been led to think that women were the pillar of the church, since they are foremost in all good church works, especially in the devotional and ornamental department, but everybody does not think so. A "subscriber" with the comment that it will benefit Peterborough, has requested publication of the following:

ZANESVILLE, O., OCT. 21. The much woman's [illegible] Dr. E. C. Mackenzie, formerly rector of Peterborough and at last the Saint James' Episcopal church this city, put it in an open letter styled as farewell, to the newspapers. Dr. Mackenzie resigned following a period of dissension in the church which seemed to have culminated in an attempt to cut his salary.

Dr. Mackenzie says the ex-rector of the church, a board of men which is supposed to consist of [illegible] a lot. There are good men on the vestry and they are not altogether to blame, they can only [illegible] we men will be there.

He says what he has to say of the church can be found [illegible]

The rector found five or six feminine societies in the parish, each existing for various objects, and each representing a different social element, and all more or less mutually exclusive and secret, thereby emphasizing divisions rather than promoting harmony and unity, and each one of preventing more or less the control the policies of the parish.

Some of his further opinions on the conditions in the church are as follows:

Too much women and too much gossip.

Spiritually bankrupt for [illegible] by events.

Members too attentive to society plans [illegible] in the church.

Some members mixed, but [illegible] due to rank, the social [illegible] else.

He says that about [illegible] that [illegible] was advised to resign as a leading member not to [illegible] in public [illegible] Sunday [illegible] picnic and [illegible] Sunday closing and other similar [illegible].

CHILD IS POISONED

Youngster at Bethany Gets Hold of Carbolic Acid in Absence of Mother and Result is Fatal

THIRD FATALITY

Special to The Examiner.

A sad fatality occurred in the village on Saturday last, when the two year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. John McGill took carbolic acid and died. Mrs. McGill left the little one in the room playing on the floor, and went outside only for a moment, and when she returned she found it lying unconscious on the floor with the empty bottle near it. The bottle had been left on the window sill and the curiosity of the child made it take the bottle and investigate its contents. A doctor was summoned but it was too late, as the little one was far beyond medical assistance. This is the third fatality to happen in the village and vicinity within the past month, another child having been scalded to death and a little boy shot.

PROFITS OF SCOUTING

One of the most interesting sights that can be seen around Peterborough on Saturday or a holiday now is the bright happy youths who have become members of the Scouts and who are the proud possessor of a uniform which means much to them. The Scout movement is so extremely new that to most people it does not mean much but appeals to them only as a something that is attracting many boys who like to play a uniform, do a little drill and then fill in the balance of their time with hour walks and amusements that are quiet down to the novel a year ago. But to one who has given much time and attention to the movement it can readily be seen that the Scouts have come to stay and there is no place of boys' work which can do more for the uplifting of the boys of this or any other city than the Scout movement. A proper Scout movement looks after the boys physically, spiritually and mentally.

A most interesting sight and a grand opportunity to see what the Scouts are doing presents itself to the public each Saturday, when the boys take to the parks and outskirts of the city for various manoeuvres which are interesting to them and to the spectators and are instructive. Last Saturday some four boys left in one party, for the south east section of the city where two camps were pitched and a very enjoyable but exacting time was spent by the boys who learnt to cook, live and sleep under the very best supervision. Then to the north-west of the city a similar stunt was carried on by a troop or two from the Y. under the supervision of Mr. Hall, their scout master assisted by Boys the Benefit of his Scout, Morrow, experience teaching them how to overcome a position.

Scouting may be in means the main idea of scouting but [illegible] in amount to hours [illegible] to teach the boys to [illegible] discipline, the winter months [illegible] knot tying, life saving and many other features. These all have their social evenings and a Rink night will be [illegible] for Scouts only were soon [illegible] are to be [illegible] Friday at the Armouries in [illegible] the Y.M.C.A. STANDING FOR THE RIGHT.

Those who are closest in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's confidence state that he is still resolute to continue his naval policy, and to rise or fall by his determination to make it plain to the world that while Canada is decided to remain within the British empire, it must be done by a policy which will be Canadian, and which will give the best results to Canada. If he should lose by such an attitude, he will stand out like the late Sir George Etienne Cartier who did not hesitate to sacrifice his publi career in the interests of promotion of the principle that Canada is and must remain an integral part of the British Empire. Sir Wilfrid believes his naval policy to be right and he will adhere to it. He will have the courage of his convictions. He nails his colours to the mast, and if he falls, he will die fighting for what he has fought all his life the unification of Canada as a nation within the British Empire.

THE JANUS GAME.

The "victory" in Drummond and Arthabaska which, by Conservative sympathy with it, becomes a Nationalist Conservative victory, promises to be troublesome to the Conservative party or party managers. The following, from the Ottawa Free Press, tells a little of the troubles that the victory is bringing them

Meanwhile the domestic difficulties of the Conservative party in the situation created by the success of the Monk-Bourassa-Lavergne campaign continue to multiply. Not only has Hon G. E. Foster, the deposed lieutenant of the leader of the Opposition, and Mr Geo. Taylor, the deposed chief whip, sent messages of congratulation to Mr. Monk but the man behind the gun," the man with the money, Rodolphe Forget, M.P., for Charlevoix, has formally repudiated Mr Borden's leadership, and called upon him to resign.

In a written statement, Mr Forget gives it out as his opinion that the "balance between the Conservatives and the Nationalists is not only unfair accomplished as a fusion. If I were to tell you the truth I would tell you that the gentlemen of the Nationalist party with Mr Bourassa at their head are even more Conservative than I who am the Conservative member for Charlevoix in the Commons.

Continuing, Mr Forget says:

I recall the words of Mr Borden in the House of Commons, the leader of the Opposition. Those who have voted against me on the naval question have not felt the pulse of the province of Quebec. They do not know how it is beating.

"Well, they know now how the pulse of Quebec is beating. Sir Wilfrid put his finger on that pulse and so has Mr. Borden. That is why I consider that both of them have been defeated in Drummond and Arthabaska.

"I do not hesitate to go further to declare that Mr. Borden has no alternative but to resign if he has any hope that his party will gain power as a result of the next election."

Mr. Borden now sees the result of "sulking in his tent" during the recent by-election. He stood by silent, with no reproach for the voices that preached treason, that denounced British connection, that advocated the disruption of both imperial and Canadian national harmony. He seemed to be content to have a treasonable junta of political opportunists destroy Sir Wilfrid, cherishing the hope which he now sees is futile that his defeat would be a stepping stone upon which he (Mr. Borden) might climb into power. Running with the hare and hunting with the hounds is a difficult feat. Mr Borden had difficulty enough with his followers as it was. The cleverest men in the ranks have either fallen away, or been driven away, from him. Mr Foster, one of these, refuses to be ostracised, and is a thorn in the flesh. George Taylor, the deposed whip, wired congratulations to Mr Monk, who was driven out of Mr Borden's ranks, and now we have Mr Forget, his strongest supporter in Quebec, the man with the money, calling upon him to resign.

DEALING WITH JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

One of the features of latter-day crime is the unusual and deplorable frequency of crimes by juvenile offenders. The wisest way of dealing with offenders of this class presents a serious problem. Justice is of a divided mind, as between too much severity that may result in converting young offenders into chronic criminals, and too much leniency, such as will encourage juvenile criminality. This subject has engaged the most astute and solicitous philanthropists. At the recent meeting in Washington of the International Prison Congress, there was careful consideration given the subject of youthful law-breakers, who are henceforth to be known as "delinquents" not criminals. Mr J. J. Kelso, who was the representative for Canada, states that the Congress unanimously agreed upon the following principles

Young delinquents should not be subjected to the penal procedure now applied to adults.

The principles that should guide the procedure applied to young delinquents are as follows

Those who are intrusted with the cognizance of the cases of young delinquents should be primarily chosen for their ability to understand and sympathize with children, and should have some special knowledge of the social and psychological sciences.

They should have the assistance of probation officers to make preliminary examination in each case, and to watch over those put on probation.

There should be made in connection with the cases of young delinquents such examinations as will contribute to the fund of information on juvenile delinquency, and the result should be used, whenever practicable, to help in the disposition of the case. These examinations should be made only by physicians who have some special knowledge of the social and psychological sciences. The personal information obtained in these examinations shall not be made public.

Whenever possible in the case of young delinquents, arrest should be resorted to in bringing them before the authorities, and orders for arrest should be issued only in exceptional cases.

When necessary to detain young delinquents, detention should not be in quarters used for adults.

In those countries where a court is entrusted with the cognizance of the cases of young delinquents, these cases should never be heard at the same session with cases of adults, and it should be the tendency to eliminate as soon as possible the prosecution and defense, and to make of the trial an examination by the judge, but to enable him to make an adjudication of the case as would be for the best interests of the child, and for the improvement of the one whose case he is hearing.

This involves the principle of locking the stable after the horse is stolen. While we give much attention to the wisest way of dealing with juvenile law-breakers, who have become delinquents, the better way is prevention than the cream of crime. In this regard the Children's Aid Society is a most potent factor, and if its principles were applied to the extreme limit of their usefulness, there would be a very great decrease of juvenile crime. The Society aims to rescue children from homes and home life of such a character as to constitute themselves nurseries of crime. If all the children of such homes were rescued, and placed in virtuous homes, they would escape the training in vicious principles which launch them upon a career of crime.

For this reason the appeal of the local Children's Aid Society for funds to carry on its beneficent and far-reaching work should be warmly received. The opportunity is presented on "Tag Day," next Saturday, when everybody will have the privilege of contributing.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's enemies in Quebec denounce him because he is too British. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's enemies in Ontario denounce him because he is not British enough. There is small hope for a united Canada, but to be one of the pillars of the Empire while such contradictory attitudes are assumed for mere partizan purposes.

Half a century after the close of the United States Civil War, the annual pension fund stands at 154 million dollars a year, nearly as much as Great Britain spends on her navy yearly. Six millions and more than one-quarter of the annual encumbrance and if the German army 200 millions. It is very well to reward the services of those who fight to save their country, but when the pension fund is used as a political lever by the party in power the honest taxpayer has a very real grievance.

Hon Mr Hanna Provincial Secretary has been making a speech at Woodstock and continued his eloquence on a discussion of Dominion politics. Our Ontario Ministers are champion chatterers. When in England Sir James Whitney took it upon himself to emulate the cavalier crow of Uncle Sam and made himself an unasked adviser of John Bull, and told him how to run the Empire. Mr Hanna rushed into the management of the Department of Education and raised no end of row. He now takes a hand in Dominion politics, which is his right as a citizen, while the affairs of his own official household demand all the wisdom and attention he has at his command.

PLAYING WITH FIRE.

Toronto Star

A national question as well as a party question is involved in the election in Drummond and Arthabaska. If it were a party question alone, concerning only party politicians, their bitterness and their little ambitions, the situation would be amusing. Some Conservative journals and speakers are perplexed by the result, and are at a loss to know what position to take. They cannot afford to endorse Bourassa and orators who went through Drummond and Arthabaska denouncing Laurier as the organizer of a press-gang, who would kidnap the breadwinners and carry him off to sea to fight the battles of England. At the same time they hate to abandon the hope that "there may be something in it for us." Mr Bourassa and the Nationalists must not be let too hard. They and the Ontario Conservatives cannot be alienated if the Nationalists choose to take a hand in the attack on Laurier there is no reason why the Conservatives should not thirdly appropriate a share of anything that may be found on the field of battle.

Such are the ways of faction. Here and there one encounters a more fair-minded attitude which may be that of a considerable body of Conservatives. We quote the Victoria Colonist

Some of our Conservative contemporaries are having a good deal of fun with internal contemporaneous because of the alarm of the latter at the growth of Nationalism in Quebec. To us this does not seem to be a subject of merriment. If the Nationalist movement under the leadership of Mr Bourassa becomes strong enough to drive the Liberals from power at Ottawa, what would the Conservatives propose to do about it. It is never safe to play with fire unless you are sure that you can put it out when you want to.

What could Mr Borden and the Conservatives do with Nationalism? How would they deal with the patent fact that Quebec while not anti-British is damned by the growth of imperial ideas and would prefer to stand apart from the movement? Would they try to drive Quebec forward, would they have the rest of Canada move forward, entering Quebec and abstain, not to stand alone, or would they try to come to an agreement with Quebec. Force driving policy is out of the question. Men cannot be made Imperialists by force. The separatist policy, the policy of Imperialism at full speed for Ontario with Quebec entering a futile protest, is quite unbearable. A disunited Canada would be poor material out of which to construct one of the pillars of a united Empire.

Nothing then, remains but to try to come to an agreement with Quebec, to frame an Imperial policy upon which Canada can unite. This is precisely what Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been trying to do, and what must be done by any statesman who has to construct and not merely to criticize.

THE PLACE OF THE CHILD IN THE SCHEME OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP

(Ottawa Citizen.)

The wisdom of the age may be rightly estimated by its regard for child life and the degree in which are created conditions conducive to its development. The basis of evolution was the lengthening period of childhood, and the longer, fuller care taken of the young life. And the conditions as we approach the higher levels of evolution are not changed in the least.

Civic sanity becomes apparent in the treatment of child life. It is more than a matter of development. All the greater interests of life are dependent upon it. No city can afford to consider the matter of cost so far as its children are concerned. Economy is a fatal policy when by reason of its conditions are not at their best.

Every city playground is surest sign of civic progress. It manifests an intelligent and practical appreciation of the fact that creation must be by means of recreation, that the faculties of the child must be given a chance to be exercised and developed, and that the natural energy of the youth is bound to come out either in healthful play or in mawkhole-some mischief. Children must play, whatever the city must pay.

The city that forgets the child will be forgotten. The citizens of 1930, upon whom the high enterprises of this city and county will depend, are on our streets today. If they are simply drifting in the current of the street, exposed to all the buffetings and contaminations of the crowd, or forced to collect their dividends of pleasure from the back alley and the "No Trespassing" field, they will not likely contribute much to good citizenship when the time comes for them to take the places of influence and power. But if they are given a fair chance now to have out their play under supervision that will incorporate into all their games and into the spirit of honour and fair play, then shall they be able to do credit to the city and honour to the citizens of 1910 who had sense enough to give them a chance.

In all this city there is no asset of greater value than the little child. Take all the wealth of every citizen, and pile it in one great glittering pile, and you have not a fraction of the value of the little baby life that was born in the city yesterday. There is no method of human computation who can be one may adequately estimate or express its worth.

The child is the culmination of all creation. It is the final product of all the age-old evolutionary forces. All the effort of good citizenship for centuries find their fulfillment in it. In every child's face you may read the history of ten thousand years and many times ten thousand lives all of which have contributed something to its character. In the lives of heroes you will read the history of the past more truly than in the leaves of books.

And the child is the future, just a it is the past. It holds in embryo the forces that shall give to humanity its greatest achievements in the days to come. The future can be only the fruition of what the child holds in trust for it. Its power can be but the development of that which beats feebly in the cradles of today. Its wisdom can be but the later sequence and satisfaction of that instinct that stirs the child's mind to question the why and wherefore of things. Its love can be but the continuation of that feeling that causes a million little arms to reach up for their good night embrace. And its hate, let every good citizen take notice, shall be in large part the result of the fact that other little arms having the same impulse are being denied their right, and the heart-sweetness of childhood sours into disappointment.

The child offers to the good citizen the supreme chance to affect the future. Through the life of a child stretch on illimitable areas of influence. If you would write large, and for eternity, write on the tablets of childhood. Touch one moment of a child's life, and you have affected its whole lifetime. Touch one little life, and ever so little, and you have shaken destiny by your act. Speak in a baby's ear, and your words shall reverberate through the centuries. Bring to bear an impulse of good upon a young life, and you have set in motion an influence whose limit of reach no man can even prophesy. When you mould the child, you make the future. It is folly to talk about building the city beautiful, unless every effort is made to build the character beautiful in child's life. There is small gain in discussing city planning unless at the very basis of all the arrangements are the purpose and the plan to make the interests of the children supreme. The child is the very basis of all that makes a city worth more than a cunning construction of building material. The building material which counts in good citizenship, and which alone can build up the soul of the city, is to be found in the cradles of today.

Do you want to do something for the future? Are you interested in the splendid modern enterprises of city planning? Do you desire to do something real for the advancement of citizenship? Do you want Canada to excel in the things that count most? Early then you will find in child life the medium for the satisfaction of your desire. In that plastic clay you may mould the ideal, making more pure unselfish and worthy the citizenship of the future. What the child is, and is made by you help, the future will become.

Note. The above article has a direct bearing upon the work and function of the Children's Aid Society. Rescue from the deteriorating and degrading conditions to which we know many children are subject. It gives point to the tag-day appeal, which will be made to the public of Peterborough next Saturday. Help save children to good citizenship

The Ottawa Journal (Con.) reminds Conservatives that the result in Drummond and Arthabaska was a much a condemnation of the Borden policy of Mr Borden as it was of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It adds

I cannot find Borden or French or Bergeron or Monk or any of the other French Conservatives who have had anything to say about the naval policy but what they are opposed to it. Quebec is opposed to it. The whole province is opposed to it. Mr Borden has not a single supporter in the province of Quebec who is not opposed to his naval policy. ENANGELISTIC SERVICES AT ST. JAMES CHURCH

Revivals are not [illegible] Holy Spirit [illegible] one meets the [illegible] Rev. R. J. Wo[illegible] services in St. [illegible]

The singing [illegible] choir, accompanied [illegible] enlarged for the [illegible] but the meeting last night [illegible] was marked by conviction and prayerfulness.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

YOU may learn to consume your own smoke. The atmosphere is darkened by the mammoth [illegible] rising to heaven over non-essentials, the trifles that are inevitably incident to the humdrumity of the day's routine. Things [illegible] about your way. Learn to accept in silence the minor annoyances, embrace the spirit of cheerfulness (about them), and consume your own smoke with an extra quantity of hard work, so that those about you may not be annoyed by the dust and soot of your complaints.—William Osler.

While waiting for a boat to sail the other day I amused myself by watching one of the [illegible] river steamers work.

Have you ever seen one? How foolish! Of course you have. And didn't you think it as fascinating to watch the [illegible] with its wide open mouth slowly descend into the river, slowly swing up again and deposit its contents of mud into the scow with a prosaic splash and [illegible] that make the thing seem almost uncanny?

I, for I can watch that weird scoop for half an hour at a time without being bored.

But on the occasion in question I failed to tell you about, I observed something particularly interesting and suggestive about the mud scow.

And that was the fact that while the scoop was going down into the water, a process which presumably did not take very much power, the chimney of the [illegible] belched forth a stream of heavy black smoke. But when the scoop, filled with mud, was being slowly lifted to the surface, while every chain was straining with the weight it was lifting, there was practically no smoke coming out of that chimney.

Isn't that the way with people? Those who are really doing something really lifting some big weight, aren't usually belching forth any useless vapour.

And those who are always just getting ready to do things can be very easily distinguished by the amount of vapour they are emitting.

Great power is almost always quiet. It flows calmly in a deep channel. It consumes its own smoke. It has its council while weaklings chatters, and folds its arms and waits, while cheap geniuses runs back and forth and to and fro in a passion of activity.

Think of someone whom you admire for strength of character and "bigness."

Isn't he or she a quiet person, tending to restraint rather than talkativeness, to repose and restraint rather than hurry?

Isn't he like the mill [illegible] making [illegible] both any smoke, vapour, because he is doing something that consumes it?

And if you admire him, can't you [illegible]

AN ACT OF PROVIDENCE

Anne's first impression of the town was that it was quite as cold and dull as any one of a great many others she had seen during her season of one-night stands. The hotel was just across the street. The company walked thither. Anne found herself tucked into a room on the third floor. There was some kind of a convention in the town and most of the best rooms were taken. Still, she felt herself fortunate in having an apartment to herself.

She sat down upon the bed in utter weariness. They had been on the road all day for a wreck had tied up traffic and held their train hours late. There was but just time to bathe and get to the theatre at 7 o'clock. Anne took off her hat and ulster and looked at herself in the muddy mirror. She knelt beside her suit case and opened it. On top stared forth at her the photograph of a man. The sight filled her heart with pain. It came to her that she had made a mistake when she did not accept him the night he asked her. She had temperament all the requirements of a great actress. And she wanted to be an actress and found an opportunity. The company started in September and it was now May. They had played from coast to coast. Now they were only a state's breadth from home. Anne found she was looking forward to home and Eugene. She had not heard from him all winter.

Nine months of hard work had killed most of her ambition and robbed her of most of her young energy. She was so tired. Her face showed it, her body had literally dropped from her bones. Her wardrobe needed replenishing for the second time. And the big salary she had built such hopes upon had resolved itself into a mere matter of dollars and cents for which there was limitless demand. As things looked now she was like to come out at the end of her first year no more than even, if not actually behind in her accounts.

She went down to dinner. She could not eat. The rattling of dishes, the smell of the food took away her appetite. She felt sick, disgusted. Suddenly, dreadfully she remembered Aunt Sabina's tea table, so faultlessly fresh with every old-fashioned dish and bit of worn silver arranged daintily upon it. There were always flowers in the little glass tub in the centre, which Eugene sometimes sent or brought, for he occasionally came to take tea with Aunt Sabina, who was one of his oldest friends.

"And Croley says the dressing rooms are under the stage."

The harsh voice recalled Anne. She shuddered and awoke to the stinging realm of discomfort and despair.

The rain that had threatened all day was falling in fine mist as she went to the theatre. It was an old building made over mostly in the wrong places. Anne wondered drearily as she dragged her satin gown up the dirty stairs to the stage, if it could possibly be made to do until she got home. Somehow the thought of home was continually in her thoughts, though she would not actually admit that she had no business to leave it for the portion that had during the last year been hers.

The play went very well. There was a large audience and the applause stimulated the actors to do their best. The train left at 9 the next morning and the "call" was scheduled for 7. With the prospect of seven hours of rest before her, Anne returned to the hotel and her room. Tired to the point of exhaustion, she undressed and went to bed. It occurred to her just as she was falling asleep that she had not located the fire escapes. But she would not get up to do so now. After all, what did it matter? She wondered a little about Aunt Sabina and Eugene. Of course he would not ask her again. Why should he? And then she fell asleep.

Dreams fluttered like musty, black wings. She awakened suddenly, sweating, with her heart going like mad. Instantly she felt that all was not as it had been when she fell asleep. She had left the gas burning low and as she looked about her she saw that it showed through a haze. The room smelled strangely and somewhere near at hand was a rustling, crackling sound. She sprang out of bed and flung on her ulster pulled on her shoes, snatched up her watch from under her pillow. Then she ran to the door and unlocked it with numb fingers. She opened the door, but such a foulness of thick, stifling smoke met her that she had to shut it again. The only other exit was the window. She ran to it, shoved it up and looked out. There were no fire escapes.

Anne stood a moment as if paralyzed. She was in the third storey as a wing and for all she knew the rest of the company might be a great distance away from her. She was perhaps forgotten. She leaned far out of the window, listening and looking. The air was heavy with smoke. She could hear the crash of falling water, the shouts of the firemen, the roar of the wicked flames. Death! With that thought screams burst from her. From the room behind her smoke was pouring out over and around her. She leaned farther and farther out. A wild desire to jump seized her, but she put it away.

"I'll take my chances," she said aloud. Then she tried to pray. But suddenly something seemed to grab her by the throat and choke all the breath out of her, and, struggling for breath, she fell mercifully backward and lay beside the window like a dead thing.

Afterward when these things were recalled to her, she seemed to have some vague consciousness of a head that appeared above the sill and a hand that reached in groping for her, of how she was lifted and carried down and thrown like a sack across somebody's shoulder. But the first thing that she clearly realized was the fact that she was lying on a clean bed in a perfectly white room that all the crackling, roaring noises were gone, that her hair smelled strong under her cheek and that some one stood with his back to her, stirring something in a glass with a spoon. He turned and came to her almost as soon as he saw her. And his face was Eugene's. She tried to speak but there seemed no voice left in her. She could only stare at him, wondering, as he lifted her up and made her drink from the glass. She tried to smile, but her eyes shut, and, with the bitter taste of the medicine in her mouth, she went to sleep. The sun was shining across her bed when she awoke, this time with her head quite clear. Eugene was sitting beside her, and he looked as if he had been watching her a good while.

"Tell me now," she began weakly. He shook his head and brought her more medicine to swallow. Then he sat down again in his chair and, leaning forward, looked at her as he smoothed one of her hands between both of his.

"You want to know all about it, don't you?" he said gently. "Well, I'll tell you what there is to tell. I came here to attend the convention. If your company had arrived on time I should have seen you in the afternoon. As it was I got to the theatre just in time to see the last two acts of your play. Then I found out, when you left in the morning, and made my plans to go with you as far as the next stand. That would give me a chance to talk to you. I knew where you were staying. When the fire broke out I came right down and tried to find you, and when I couldn't I got hold of the clerk and made him locate your room for me. Of course I knew then that you had been forgotten in the melee. As soon as I could find a ladder I got you out. That's all, Anne."

"Oh," Anne said, and she somehow pulled his hands up to her lips and kissed them.

"I'm going to take you home with me," he said.

She was crying now with her arm up over her eyes like a little child.

"I'll go," she said.

"And then I'm going to keep you there. I, Anne, do you hear?"

"Who else?" she whispered, and she took down her arms and tried to smile her gratitude and joy at him through her tears.

WORK AND OBJECTS OF CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY TAG DAY ON SATURDAY

The following explanation of the work and objects of the Children's Aid Society is important in view of the Tag Day campaign to be conducted on Saturday, and a perusal of this article will enable one to give more intelligently, and it is hoped more generously, when one of the one hundred and fifty tag girls call upon you on Saturday.

The work and objects of the society are:

To protect children from cruelty, to care and protect neglected, abandoned and orphaned children, to provide such children as may be lawfully committed and entrusted to the society with suitable homes in private families, and to watch over and guard their interests and promote their happiness and well being, to secure the enforcement of laws relating to neglected and dependent children or juvenile offenders and generally to interest all classes in the social problem of the neglected, abandoned or orphaned children, to mediate between parents and children and between judicial officers and youthful offenders, with a view to bringing about reformation without the stigma of imprisonment, to improve home surroundings and to add to the happiness of young people.

It is hard to remove the impression that the Children's Aid Society exists solely for the purpose of taking children from their parents. The main object of the society is not to take children from their parents, but by kindly effort, and, if necessary, legal action, to bring about sobriety, cleanliness and moral living, for the sake of the children. But there are occasions when those efforts are of no avail, and the children have to be removed for the sake of their own future and for the protection of society.

Under the provisions of the Children's Protection Act of Ontario, all children coming under the guardianship of a society are required to be placed in foster homes as soon as possible. A child placed in a public institution still remains homeless in the real sense, and it cannot be given that affection, sympathy and individual treatment so essential for its proper growth. The ideal to which the society strives is a home for every homeless child.

Some five thousand five hundred children have been received under the guardianship of the Children's Aid Society in Ontario, from the lowest possible surroundings and transferred to foster homes and the Superintendent reports that less than two per cent. of these children have gone back to the conditions from which they were received. The average placement is three hundred and fifty (350). In 1909 805 children were placed for the first time, of this number 408 were Protestant and 137 Catholic.

The Government has provided for the personal visitation of all children placed in foster homes by the various Children's Aid Societies, and no matter in what part of the Province a child may be it is visited at least once a year in order to make sure that it is well treated and also as an encouragement to foster parents. A written report of each visit is submitted to the Superintendent at Toronto, and by him into the Secretary of the society of which each child is a ward.

The Children's Aid Society is an organization which in itself cannot accomplish the whole work to be done unless it has the co-operation of the citizens of each community.

There are 9 children in the Shelter in this city and there are that many more who should be there forthwith. The citizens of Peterborough can co-operate and assist in the work of the society by a generous response to the Tag Girls' appeal next Saturday.

PLENTY OF SMOKE BUT THERE WAS LITTLE FIRE

The fire brigade got a call last night about 8.47 from box 23, to Mr. C. M. Moncur's drug store, corner of George and Hunter Streets. Some sweeping from the floor got into the grate in the floor above the furnace, and when some paper and boxes were put into the furnace the extreme heat caused the stuff to ignite. The drug store was filled with smoke, but other than that, no damage was done. The brigade responded promptly and extinguished the blaze with one chemical.

A meeting of the Pleasure Club of St. Peter T. A. S. will be held to-morrow (Wednesday) evening at 8 o'clock, for the election of officers and the transaction of other business. It has been decided to form a Dramatic Section in connection with the Society, and to give a minstrel entertainment, the estate and other particulars of which will be announced later.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Nov. 7.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 122 carloads, consisting of 2552 cattle, 906 sheep and 30 calves.

Exporters.

Maybee and Wilson bought on order 20 export cattle, at $5.75 to $6.

Butchers.

Butchers' cattle of good quality were in demand and sold readily at 10c to 15c per cwt. higher, and more could have been sold. There were three picked cattle, 1160 lbs. each, sold by Maybee and Wilson, at $6, which was the highest price heard of. Selected loads sold at $5.40 to $5.75, loads of good, $5.25 to $5.40; medium, $4.90 to $5.15; common, $4.25 to $4.80; cows, $3 to $4.75; bulls, $3.50 to $4.25; canners, $2.25 to $2.40.

Stockers and Feeders.

Trade was not as large nor as brisk as usual for feeders. Short-keeps are worth from $5.25 to $5.50; good steers, 900 to 1000 lbs., $5 to $5.25; steers, 800 to 900 lbs., $4.75 to $5; stockers, $4 to $4.75.

Milkers and Springers.

There seems to be no abatement in the demand for milkers and springers. Prices ranged at from $55 to $65 each.

Veal Calves.

Not many calves were on sale. Prices ranged at from $4 to $7.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Prices for sheep and lambs were 20c per cwt. higher than last week. Lambs sold at $6, and sheep at $5 per cwt. See sales given below.

Hogs.

None on sale. W. J. Johnston, buyer for Gunns, reports prices as follows: Selects, fed and watered, at 9c, and $5.75 to drovers for hog fed cars at country points. Mr. Johnston reported having bought five carloads to arrive at these prices.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Nov. 7.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Nov. 5 were 2700 cattle, 2700 sheep and lambs, 2200 hogs and 210 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale consisted of 1500 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 150 calves.

Prices show an advance of ½c to ¾c per lb. A feature of the trade was the buying for St. John, N.B., account, and several carloads will be shipped to that point. There was also an increased demand from packers for canning purposes. Choice steers sold at 5¾c to 5¾c, good at 5c to 5¼c, fairly good at 4¾c to 4¾c, fair at 4c to 4¼c, and common at 3½c to 3¾c per lb. The undertone to the market for hogs continues weak, and prices as compared with those paid a week ago show a further decline of 15c per 100 lbs., and with last Wednesday 10c. Prospects are for still lower prices in the near future. Sales of selected lots were made at $7.50 per 100 lbs. weighed off cars.

An easier feeling has developed in the market for lambs. An active trade was done with sales of Upper Canada stock at 6c to 6¼c, and Quebec stock at 5¾c to 6c per lb. There is no change in the condition of the market for sheep, for which the demand is fair at 3¾c to 4c per lb. There was a good enquiry for choice milk fed calves, which were scarce, and buyers found it difficult to fill their wants at 5½c to 6c per lb. live weight.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Nov. 7. Cattle—Receipt, 200 head; slow and 15c to 25c lower; prime steers, $6.75 to $7, shipping, $6 to $6.50, butchers, $4.50 to $5.75; heifers, $4.25 to $5.25; cows, $2.50 to $5; bulls, $3.50 to $5.15; stockers and feeders, $4.25 to $5.60; stock heifers, $3.60 to $4.15; fresh cows and springers steady to $2 lower, $30 to $90.

Died on Train.

Lindsay, Nov. 8.—A telegram received here yesterday announced the death of Fremont Crandell, one of the best known residents of Lindsay. Mr Crandell was purchasing agent of the Grand Trunk Pacific, with headquarters at Prince Rupert.

The deceased had been unwell for several weeks, visiting his family, and had left here on his return trip to the west on Oct. 22. He reached Wetaskawin on Nov. 2, and at the noon hour was apparently well, walking two miles to the station. Later he complained of some stomach derangement, and becoming alarmingly ill and unconscious, dying on the train at 4.30, despite the medical skill of two doctors, who were on the train.

A Windfall For Warden.

Kingston, Nov. 8. Daniel O'Leary, deputy warden of the penitentiary, was bequeathed $2,000 by his uncle, Jarvis Morgan, who died at Potsdam, N.Y., leaving a fortune of $500,000, divided between four nephews, the others being John O'Leary, Prescott; Henry O'Leary, Ottawa; George O'Leary, Norwood, N.Y., and three sons, the late Con. O'Leary, Ottawa; George and Morgan O'Leary.

Owing to the fact that men cannot be secured for shoker work at the penitentiary, the work is being done by convicts. Inspector Dawson will investigate. The claim is made that one man cannot do the work, and that if outsiders are to do it, two men must be put on the job.

TWO ADDRESSES

The last of the distinguished preachers of the opening services at All Saints' will be the Lord Bishop of Ontario, the Rt. Rev. William Lennox Mills, D.D., who will preach both morning and evening next Sunday. Bishop Mills has preached in Peterborough before and no doubt large congregations will show their appreciation of his visiting Peterborough again. His Lordship is a splendid personality, of commanding figure, eloquent in discourse and spiritual in his preaching. The rector of All Saints was ordained both deacon and priest in St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, by Bishop Mills.

"ANERVOUS WRECK"

"My daughter is rapidly becoming a nervous wreck," said an anxious father to a friend who happened to be a druggist, "she has no apetite, is run-down, weak, takes no interest in anything, and we cannot find anything that helps her."

"Why don't you give her Vinol"—said the druggist "it is not a secret nostrum, just a simple and delicious cod liver and iron tonic and the best strength creator and general all round tonic we have ever sold in our store. Take a bottle home and try it. We'll return your money if it does not help her."

Within ten days the father came back for another bottle of Vinol, saying that he had never seen such a change in a girl in his life, and he felt sure one more bottle of Vinol would restore her to her normal condition."

Such cases as the above are constantly coming to our attention, and we ask every run down, nervous, debilitated, aged or weak person in this vicinity, and every person suffering from a chronic cough, cold, or bronchial trouble, to try a bottle of Vinol on the same terms as above. THE LIFE AND WORK OF ANTHONY TROLLOPE

A Scholarly Lecture in All Saints' Hall by Rev. Dr. Symonds, of Montreal, Last Evening.

GREATLY APPRECIATED

The lecture delivered last night in All Saints' parish hall by Rev. Dr. Symonds, was a great and delightful success. A large and representative audience greeted the lecturer and listened with pleasure to a programme, to which accomplished soloists and pianists added no inconsiderable relat

A solo finely rendered by Miss Dawson, entitled "Roses," by Trotere, the accompanist being Miss Helen Davies, opened the evening's entertainment, and was followed by a duet by Misses Sisson and Stark, which was honoured by an encore.

The rector of the church, Rev. H R Trumpour, then introduced the lecturer, Dr. Symonds, who was greeted with loud applause when he arose to address the audience. "It was always a great pleasure," he said to visit Peterborough, and his one regret was that his visits were always so short that it was absolutely impossible for him to meet the many friends whom he had in the city. He hoped that those whom he had been unfortunate enough not to meet, would understand that it was purely lack of time that had prevented him from doing so. The subject of his lecture was the life and work of Anthony Trollope. In order to treat that subject thoroughly, necessitated placing it under two heads, (1) the life of the author, (2) readings from his works. On this occasion he would only be able to deal with Trollope, the author and the man. Anthony Trollope as an author was not very well known in Canada, nor were his writings at the present time much the vogue in England, and it might seem strange to some of his hearers that he had taken his life and works as his theme for that evening. To him, however, Trollope was a most interesting personality, and he hoped to be enabled to make his life as interesting a character study to his hearers as it had proved to be to himself. There were points in it which were well worthy of consideration and emulation. Trollope was that rather rare specimen of man who was perfectly conscious of his own literary shortcomings. He had no feeling of superiority over any of his fellows and had a frank and out-spoken detestation of such authors as proclaimed that they only wrote when they were "inspired." Diligence in work and a steady adherence to his method of accomplishing that work, was one of the outstanding points in his character. Beyond this he presented to the world the picture of a hearty, though somewhat brusque specimen, of the English gentleman. Trollope's early years had not been happy ones. His father, a barrister, a former fellow of New College, Oxford, had turned from law to agriculture and subsequently, in order to improve the impaired fortunes of the family had packed his wife and three children off to Cincinnati, to set up a shop for the sale of fancy trinkets. The shop did not pay, but the visit of Mrs. Trollope gave her plenty of material for a book which she wrote, entitled, "Domestic Manners of the Americans." Although it didn't please the Americans, it brought her in a considerable sum of money, and thenceforward she contrived by the sale of her books to keep the family from absolute penury. Her marvelous industry is shown by the fact that she produced no less than 114 volumes during her literary career.

Trollope spent his boyhood days at Harrow and Winchester, and he has written in very terse and graphic words what the state of his mind was at that time. His avowal that he had no friends and was despised by all his companions sums up in a nutshell the misery that the poverty of his family brought upon him in his school life. On leaving school he managed to get a clerkship in the London post office, but he was to have been at first a very unsatisfactory employe, and was occasionally in bad odour with his superiors, as the following anecdote will show. A letter containing money had been lost, and Col Maberly, his chief, caused Trollope to be haled before him. "There were only two persons in this office when the letter was lost," said his chief to Trollope, "you and I." "Then," replied Trollope, "you must have taken it." The letter was afterwards found under a piece of blotting paper. A change came in his life when he married. His bride was Miss Rose Heseltine, whom he met in Ireland. They were married in June, 1844. Trollope as a youth had dreamed of novel writing, and now he began his efforts in that line. The stubborn English spirit of the man is seen in the fact that for ten years he tried hard to win recognition, the emoluments from his works for that period amounting to only $270. But he never faltered, and kept diligently labouring, believing in the well known French saying, "Audace, Audace, toujours l'audace." Recognition came at last, and in generous measure, for by the time he reached the end of his labours he had earned no less than $400,000 by his pen. Trollope's works are not works of genius, his "nulla dies sine linea" (no day without a goal) method precluded this. He was not the equal of Dickens or Thackeray, or George Eliot, but he ranked high in the second class with Bulwer Lytton and Beaconsfield. Many of his works will probably sink into oblivion, possibly all save the Barset series, but the character of the man is greater than his works, and we cannot help but admire the consistent way in which he went about his daily tasks, and accomplished annd daily official duties and a gentleman's sporting pleasures, an amount of writing that seems little short of stupendous.

His Honour Judge Huycke in moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer, mentioned that he had had the good

WHAT TAG DAY MEANS

What does Children's Aid Tag Day mean?

You will find out next Saturday, and it is in your power to help give it a very substantial meaning.

But, for fear you may not want to wait till then you are told now, so that you will be prepared.

Children's Aid Tag Day means that the Society's coffers are low.

It means that there are nine children in the Shelter now, and many more that should be there, to be fed, warmed, clothed and cared for, and that money is needed for these purposes.

It means that every citizen (especially YOU) is called upon in the interests of society to help save for good citizenship and comfortable, adoptive homes, the children rescued and to be rescued, from homes of cruelty, squalor, dirt, degredation, neglect, and the certainty if not rescued,—of growing up criminals, thieves, or prostitutes, or, in any event, a danger, a menace to, and a burden on, society.

Tag Day means that next Saturday, November 12th, 150 bright-faced girls will invade the whole city, "tackle" every citizen, and ask him or her to contribute little or much—preferably more—to replenish the funds of the society.

It means that when you make your donation you will have a tag fixed on your person by fair fingers, which will in turn mean that you are immune from further solicitation.

It also means that if you are anxious for another interview with a charming young lady you may pocket your tag and buy another.

It means that an average contribution of five cents each from 10,000 of the 17,000 persons in the city will mean $500; and an average of ten cents each, $1,000.

Now you know what Children's Aid Tag Day means.

Now you've got the meaning; but that does not mean that you need be mean in expressing your knowledge of its meaning.

PHILOMATHEAN SOCIETY HAS ENJOYABLE MEETING

An open meeting of the Philomathean Society of the Collegiate Institute was held yesterday afternoon at 4.15 o'clock when a most enjoyable programme was given.

After the reading of the minutes of the last meeting the president, John Hargrave, gave a short address referring to the objects of the Society and the success it has made since it was inaugurated. He took advantage of the occasion to thank the students for electing him.

Miss Hall gave a piano solo that was much appreciated.

Miss Pearl Wilson Armstrong gave a reading subject "How Mr. Bolton's Sermon Paper a Success." The secretary, Miss M. Edwards and the treasurer, Mr. Jack Harstone, addressed the members, thanking them for their election.

A piano solo by Miss Giroux and a vocal number by Miss B. Billington were appreciated items.

An interesting feature was the reading of "The Echoes" by Mr. W. Armstrong.

A reading by Miss Halpin was greatly enjoyed.

After the usual criticism by Mr. Pettit, the meeting closed with the singing of the national anthem.

A FOWL SUPPER AND CONCERT AT BETHANY

Enjoyable Affair Held Last Night Under the Auspices of the Methodist Church — Addresses by Rev. Dr. Marsh and Others.

WAS GREAT SUCCESS

BETHANY, ONT., NOV. 8.—The annual fowl supper and entertainment in connection with the Methodist church here, was held last night, and was attended by the usual success. An excellent supper was served in the basement of the church. The systematic arrangements were worthy of mention and special praise should be given for the prompt attention every person received at the tables. Numerous waiters were on hand.

Supper was served from 4:30 until 8 o'clock, when an excellent entertainment was given in the town hall. The items on the programme were all of a very high order, and outside talent as well as local artists, contributed. The hall was very appropriately decorated with Canadian flags and Union Jacks for the occasion, and it was crowded to its capacity, not even standing room being left unoccupied.

Rev. D. I. Williams occupied the chair, and opened the entertainment by making a short speech. This was followed by a much appreciated address from Rev. Patterson. A piano solo was then played by Miss Atkin. It was very artistically done and won the applause of the audience.

Miss Graham, of St. Thomas, was then introduced and sang "Love in the Springtime." This number was much applauded and won an encore, which was equally appreciated.

Rev. Dr. Marsh then made an address in his usual witty and acceptable manner and his remarks were greeted with laughter and applause by the audience.

Miss Storey, elocutionist, entertained the audience with a reading which was very amusing and won hearty applause and an encore.

Miss Graham again favored the audience with a solo "In the Summer Time," and was again encored.

Rev. Mr. Limbert, of Orono, gave a very pleasing address, after which Miss Graham again sang.

Mr. T. W. Galbraith, of Port Hope made a very impressive address, which was followed by another short speech from Rev. Dr. Marsh.

Rev. Mr. Wilson moved a vote of thanks, which was duly carried. Rev. Mr. Williams and Rev. T. R. Graham also made short speeches, in which they congratulated the audience and members of the church upon the splendid success of the evening and wished them future success.

Miss Graham then tendered another vocal solo, which brought to a close a very excellent, entertaining and profitable concert.

A number of Peterborough people were present, and also others from distant points, which goes to show the reputation which the annual concert and fowl supper has earned for itself. It was a complete success from start to finish, its success being even greater than that of former years. Much credit is due to those who managed the affair and made the arrangements, which were carried out perfectly.

More Deadly Than The Plague

The Common Cold is Held Responsible For a Multitude of Human Ills.

Colds kill more people than plagues. When not avoided they can often be hurled from the system by keeping the filtering and excretory organs active.

Many write us that nothing helps them to so quickly get rid of a cold as Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. This is because these pills act directly on the liver, kidneys and bowels, and promptly arouse their activity.

The poisonous matter which collects with every cold is quickly removed from the system before it has time to cause trouble or give rise to other derangements.

If misfortune in the form of a cold should overtake you do not give it a chance to attack the lungs or to settle on the kidneys. Get rid of it quickly by using Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills.

Mr. J. H. Gibbard, Mission City, B. C., writes:—"We have used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills for the last year, and think they are just the thing as a family medicine. My wife had been sick for nearly two years with torpid liver and kidney complaint. Sometimes she was so bad she had to go to bed for two or three weeks at a time, and she suffered dreadfully.

"Reading of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, she decided to use them and has been improving ever since. She is never sick a day now, so we believe the cure permanent. I have been greatly benefitted myself by this treatment for kidney trouble."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on every box.

Edwards of Keene, the junior winner, has so far made no reply to the protest entered against him, and unless he comes forward with proofs, will be disqualified.

Will Take Strike Vote.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Negotiations between the officials of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the general managers of sixty-one railroads operating west of Chicago, on the demand for better working conditions for engineers, were broken off yesterday afternoon. The brotherhood officials announced that a strike vote will be taken.

Left Work Unfinished.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 8.—The Russell Engineering Co.'s dredge, that has been dredging Chippawa Creek for the past two months, left yesterday, work not completed. Wm. M. German, M.P., declares that dredging would be completed early next year, but the villagers are dubious that no good has been done by the dredging so far.

Makes Charges Against Police.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Archbishop Bruchesi Sunday denounced the licenses allowed to the road houses and hotels, and said the police knew they were being used for immoral purposes, and that they did nothing, owing to influence in high places. The answer of Chief Campeau was a general denial.

Goods by Aeroplane.

Columbus, O., Nov. 8.—Phil O. Parmalee of Michigan, one of the Wright Bros.' aeroplane operators, yesterday made the fastest cross-country flight ever made in a biplane. Parmalee flew from Dayton direct to Columbus, passing over South Charleston and London.

The airline distance, as given out by the Wrights, is 65 miles, and the flight was made in 60 minutes. Parmalee carried $1,000 worth of silk for a dry goods' firm, and it is said that this is the first time that the biplane has been put to such commercial use.

Parmalee flew at a height of 3,000 feet.

A "Vilifying Report."

Melbourne, Nov. 8.—Premier Murray at Victoria emphatically contradicts what he characterizes as "an execrable vilifying press report" from Australia, published in some Canadian papers, regarding the resignation of Thomas Tait, chairman of the Victorian Railway Commissioners. Premier Murray says that his resignation was entirely voluntary, and greatly regretted by the Government.

New Secretary of Alliance.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—The annual general meeting of the Dominion Alliance opened here yesterday afternoon. The election of officers brought one important change, Rev. W. M. Rochester of Winnipeg, formerly general secretary for the west, becoming Dominion general secretary, to replace Rev. T. Albert Moore, formerly of Hamilton, now of Toronto, resigned.

Yacht Wrecked.

Tobermoray, Nov. 8.—Saturday night the yacht Villa of Alpena, Mich., ran on the shoals off Yeo Island, 12 miles from here. The crew succeeded in landing safely on the island, and were unable to reach here till yesterday, on account of the heavy seas of Sunday. The Villa was completely wrecked. The cabin and upper works were washed off by the seas. The yacht was valued at $30,000.

THE DEMOCRATIC SWEEP HEARST CALLS ROOSEVELT A ROYAL PRETENDER

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., NOV. 9.—Not until this morning, when the belated returns from the outlying places came in did the full effect of the Democratic sweep yesterday become known. The plurality of Governor Dix in New York State is said to be 67,000 thousand, just about the same as that of Hughes last election. The other States in which the gubernatorial results gave a sweep to slam to the Roosevelt Republicans were Massachusetts, Ford, 22,000; Ohio, Harmon, 40,000; Connecticut, Baldwin, 2,000; New Jersey, Wilson, 37,000; Texas, Colquitt, 125,000, and many others as returns from the Pacific States come in. It seems to be assured that the new Congress will also be Democratic. William R. Hearst, head of the Independence League, says this morning: "I am not disposed to mourn for Mr Roosevelt, in fact I am thoroughly delighted that the United States, like Portugal, has decided to become a republic and depose and reject this royal pretender."

Another Accident As Result Of Premature Discharge Of Weapon

Special to The Examiner.

HAVELOCK, NOV. 9.—What might have resulted in death happened at Oak Lake on Saturday. Mr. Norris Whitney was taking the shell out of a gun, when it exploded, the bullet passing into the breast of his little girl who was standing by watching her father. Mr. Whitney, who is just recovering from an illness, fainted in the chair from shock and the little girl, not knowing she was injured and thinking her father had shot himself ran in great alarm to tell her mother. It was sometime after that she complained of something hurting her and when examined by her mother and father found the bullet, but fortunately they were able to get it out. She was at once brought to Havelock to Dr. Holdcroft, and it is thought she will get all right.

CROWDED COURT ROOM

Special Wire to the Examiner.

GODERICH, NOV. 9.—The little courtroomm was crowded this morning when Magistrate Butler proceeded to investigate the charge against Edward Jardine of murdering Lizzie Anderson. There was something of a surprise when Crown Attorney Seagar announced that the charge of being an accessory against Thos. Jardine, would be withdrawn. Lawyer Dancy consented to the committal for trial of Edward, who appeared much worried.

WINDSOR, NOV. 9.—Speaking at a meeting at the Alumni of Assumption College last night Bishop Fallon referred indirectly to the widely discussed bilingual question, saying: "I am determined that all boys and young men in my diocese shall be enabled to receive an education to fit them for success in life."

Fell From Car Brakeman Injured

Special to The Examiner.

HAVELOCK, NOV. 9.—Mr. Fred Howard, a C.P.R. brakeman on the Smith's Falls division was seriously injured on Monday morning at Central Ontario junction by falling off the top of a box car. His arm and back were badly hurt, but he was quite conscious when picked up. If he had struck his head and been stunned, without a doubt he would have been run over by the train and killed. He was brought to Havelock and taken to Mrs. Campbell's, where his injuries were attended to by Dr. Holdcroft. He is as well as can be expected, and it is thought he will soon recover and be around again.

MINERS ARE IMPRISONED

Special to The Examiner:

TRINIDAD, COL., NOV. 9.—There's a grim battle for lives being fought here at the mouth of a mine, where several shore miners are still imprisoned by explosioned walls. Fourteen have been taken out alive.

EXTRA ACCOMMODATION

Has Just Been Added to the Royal Theatre

The management of the Royal Theatre is continually adding improvements to the handsome little playhouse, that add to the convenience and comfort of its patrons. This morning an additional number of seats arrived and are being placed in position. This will give a seating capacity of six hundred, and as the patronage warrants it a gallery will be opened and judging from the present popularity of the amusement centre, it will not be long before the extra seats will be a necessity.

With and Without

In the matter of Education, those who have had the privileges of a liberal education would not be without its advantages. Many who have not a liberal education, like many who need glasses, do not realize their lack of ability to earn a livelihood, the lack of enjoyments, etc. We frequently have persons remark: "Oh, if I had but known that such comfort and clear vision were possible, I would have had these glasses long ago. I would not be without them for many times their price."

HIGH PRICES

Mr. W. J. Devlin has just received a letter from his nephew, Mr. James Fitzgerald, Deputy Sheriff of Black Lake, Wisconsin, which speaks very highly of the returns received by the farmers surrounding that village. While the population of the village is only about five hundred, the country about is one of the most thriving. The price obtained for cheese was, according to last sales, fourteen and three-quarter cents. The price for hogs in the spring was $10, live weight and this fall $8.50. While corn, oats and barley were all excellent crops and sold at good prices, over seventy thousand per month was received by the farmers community for their farm products. These are the conditions that prevail on agricultural lands. He therefore exact brought him in returns over $1,000 in the season.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 9, 1910

UNITED STATES ELECTIONS.

Yesterday the biennial general elections to elect members to the House of Representatives took place in forty States of the neighbouring Republic. The free and independent electors of the United States declared emphatically against the dictatorship of Theodore Roosevelt, and against high tariff—the latter a hint to the British tariff reformers and promising to be a modifying influence in pending reciprocity negotiations. The Democrats now control the House of Representatives, a triumph which puts them in sight of a wire in the Presidential contest two years hence. It is held by those who claim to read the signs aright, that the real issue was Roosevelt—"the spectacular attempt of Roosevelt to re-establish himself as the dominating force in United States politics"—and on this issue Roosevelt has suffered ignominious defeat, and seems to be out of the running as Presidential candidate in 1912. The Democrats have been out in the cold a long time, but there seems to be a chance of their getting their turn at last.

CARELESSNESS, NOT ACCIDENT

The annual slaughter incident to the hunting season has begun. Dr Harvie, of Orillia, was shot in mistake for a deer the other day, and others have been similarly treated. Is there no way to end this needless destruction of human life? A railway man whose carelessness causes accident and death; an employer of labour, whose defective machinery causes mutilation or death, or an auto driver, who, by his carelessness and recklessness, destroys life, is accountable by law; but there is apparently no law to reach the miscreant who enters the woods and by his criminal negligence and carelessness destroys human life. Such a man enters the woods with murder in his heart, bound to kill something. He sees something moving, and without waiting to see what it is, he fires, and, as has happened in many cases, he commits murder. There is in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases, out of a thousand, no excuse for the man who makes such a mistake. He is so indifferent to the value of human life, and he is so anxious to kill something that he takes the criminal chance of killing a human being. The so-called accidents result from hunters firing at an object they cannot properly see. They hope it may be a deer, but whether it be deer, cow, bear, or man, they take no chance of losing it. An old hunter told the Examiner this morning that unless he proposed to commit suicide, no money would tempt him to enter the hunting woods under present conditions, with long-range rifles, and the woods full of eager hunters, liable to fire at anything that simulated life—a leaf waving in the wind—a hidden deer or a hidden man. Most of the man-shooting tragedies in the deer woods are not accidents but the results of criminal carelessness.

SHOULDER TO SHOULDER.

The result of the bye-election in Drummond and Arthabaska is no subject for congratulation to loyal Canadians and loyal supporters of the integrity of the empire. It may serve as a subject of unholy glee to the empire-wreckers, who have for the moment triumphed. But all Canadians, all loyal British subjects, without reference to party—whose party at such a time should be the state—are called upon to unite solidly in sentiment, speech and action against the disintegrating element that has reared its head, as in Drummond and Arthabaska. There are some Conservative journals that take a sane view of the matter, such as the Ottawa Journal and Ottawa Citizen. The latter comments thus on the election result:

The Citizen does not disguise the fact that it regrets very much that the candidate of the Laurier Government should have been defeated under the circumstances. While we have criticized the government policy in detail, and regretted the fact that the programme was so obviously curtailed to placate Quebec, still in the main it represented an honest effort in the direction of assisting in the defence of the Empire. The Citizen has, therefore, no sympathy with Bourassa and his Quebec agitators, whose sole object is apparently to prevent any assistance whatever being furnished either directly to the Imperial fleet, or by taking over the defence of the Canadian coasts.

If the campaign had touched and concerned only the question of the Canadian navy, it would be a small matter; that is a subject upon which difference of opinion can be legitimately held and expressed. But the campaign developed opinions that cannot be legitimately entertained—opposition to Canada's recognition, as an imperial unit, of the duty of bearing its share in the defence of the common interest, hostility and opposition to British connection and all that that implies. This feature should solidify as one man all who set any value upon Canada solidarity of national sentiment, standing, and citizenship, Canadian progress and development and the inexpressible benefits and absolute necessity of the maintenance of British connection By such the Nationalists of Quebec, and what they stand for, are to be regarded as the common enemy. The Conservative party in Canada have always posed as the ultra-British party, but on many occasions, many members of the party have permitted themselves to subordinate their principles in this regard to considerations or fancied considerations, of party advantage. At the present time it is not a good augury for Canadian interests, and imperial interests, that so many Conservative leaders and newspapers are found applauding a faction the self-declared enemy of British connection and Canadian autonomy. It is not Sir Wilfrid Laurier only that was affected by the result of the election; he is only a leader for the moment, and will in time pass beyond the influence of criticism or approval. He is only an incident in our national life. But it is a blow to something that stands to be permanently injured, something that should last for all time, a united Canada as a nation within the empire. If the counsels of the "Nationalists" obtain there will be no Canada as we hope to see it, Canada united, progressive and great. Those who applaud or in any way give comfort to the disintegrating element which has won a temporary success, are not only condoning a great national crime and sowing tares in the national field, but are baring their own backs for the stripes. This is the time for all Canadians, no matter what party brand they wear to stand shoulder to shoulder against the forces of national disintegration.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The papers state that Roosevelt made a "whirlwind finish" of his campaign. In the light of the results, he is a fairly good illustration of "sowing the wind and reaping the whirlwind."

H.M.C.S. Rainbow arrived at Esquimalt, B.C., sharp on scheduled time after her trip around the world. And she was as cordially welcomed by Premier McBride and the Conservatives of British Columbia, as the Niobe was boycotted by Leader Borden and the Conservatives of Halifax.

The Toronto News tells the world "the Conservative of the English provinces cannot profit through an alliance with Mr. Bourassa." If this be the case, why, asks the Ottawa Free Press, is it that the Conservative newspapers, with few exceptions, are rejoicing "the rebuff to Laurier?"

At the celebration of the foundation of Berlin University, Germany, there was drunk 4,000 gallons of beer drank, and Emperor William horrified at this gross excess, selected four students and read them a lecture on the evils of beer drinking. As he said, beer unfits men for active life. We all know that too much beer makes big heads—a big head from beer will soon pass away, but as Emperor William should know, there is a worse form of big head, one that "pick-me-ups" will not cure.

Conservative Contribution To The Laurier Ascendency In Quebec

(Montreal Herald.)

After all, there could be no finer tribute to a public man than that which Sir Wilfrid has received at the hands of friends and opponents since last Thursday evening. His friends are shocked, his opponents rendered jubilant, by the sign that his word is not all powerful with the people of Quebec. People on both sides had come to be so sure that he had only to raise his hand to be obeyed. It may sound incredible to those who who have been writing so glibly about his "vanity," but if there was only one man in Canada who did not believe in the popular theory The Herald is disposed to think Sir Wilfrid himself was the one. Adulation is all very well, but the Liberal chieftain was not to be deceived by it. Nobody who listened to the Montreal speech could have any idea the highest degree, but not of vanity or inspired by cocksureness. Far from it. That speech involved a physical strain such as few men of his years would care to have. It bore evidence of long, careful and deliberate preparation such as no busy man would give to the task of convincing people if he thought his own say so was enough to carry their judgment. His references to the possible early cessation of his labours were significant in the highest degree but not of vanity or cocksureness.

In point of fact, it seems to be forgotten that there have been other occasions on which the reliance of Liberal workers on the magic of the name of Laurier had disappointing result. Once was when on the death of the late Mr Prefontaine, here was an election here in Montreal. There was a Liberal candidate, and there was a Labour candidate. Well, the Liberal orators talked Laurier, Laurier, till they were blue in the face, but the Labour candidate won. To-day he is more or less of a Laurier Liberal himself, but no matter. Again, there was the famous by-election in Quebec county, when Mr. Fitzpatrick retired. Again the magic of the word Laurier was tried, and again it didn't work the spell. The Liberal candidate was beaten by young Mr. Robitaille, who ran a meteor course in Parliament and disappeared with meteor suddenness, the constituency afterwards returning to its old love.

In these two cases, both significant in their way, the fighting ground was local, there was little or no pressure from outside the province. Now consider the circumstances in which the Laurier ascendancy, in its powerful reality, had its origin. It was a gift from the extreme wing of the Conservative party in the other provinces. It took root in the two-sided agitation over the Riel rebellion it was made strong and vicious by the campaign of 1900. The violence of the agitation against Riel had its counterpart in the violence of the agitation which took Mercier to power; and it was Mercier who broke the back of Conservative ascendancy in Quebec, gave a new turn to the national self-consciousness, and prepared the way for the swing to Laurier as a Quebec hero which overrode all obstacles in 1896. But it was in 1900 that the work was completed, the year when Sir Charles Tupper allowed himself to be seduced by the St James Street Junta into making his anti-Laurier campaign an anti-Quebec campaign, and so binding Quebec hard and fast to Laurier. They thought they could do it, and protect their own candidates with money, but they were wrong. Hardly a survivor remained. People talk of the power of Quebec nationalism behind Laurier. They fail to reflect, on the one side, that it was a gift of Sir Charles Tupper and those who misled him, and on the other, that a prestige gained in these circumstances is not to be drawn upon for all purposes, or to be calmly, say indeed lazily, depended upon as a substitute for all other forms of political action.

We rather recommend to students of Canadian politics, especially Liberal students, the calm consideration of these details, having regard especially for what the future has in store, and not forgetting, either, the earlier story of how variously, and with what relative success, George Brown and Sir John Macdonald handled what was essentially the same problem as now presents itself.

THE SAME OLD STORY.

(London Advertiser)

Writing in Le Devoir, Mr. Burassa recalls his last interview with Sir Wilfrid Laurier in "the crisis of 1905." He was urging the Premier to make ecclesiastical control of the minority schools a principle of the western autonomy bills, but the Government declared for the present system of state control. Mr. Bourassa comments in this rhetorical fashion:

"In parting from him, I resumed thus my train of thought: Through love of facile glory, of power, and of repose, you refuse, for the third time to battle for the defence of a principle; you turn your back upon those who truly love you, who wish to assure your greatness and your moral power, in order to give yourself up to the counsels and works of those who aspire only to feed at the trough. Take care; a day will come when they will drag you down into their depths, and the power that you are not willing to risk, even remotely, for justice and truth you will lose ignominiously in the mire."

Put this side by side with the utterances of the Ontario enemies of Laurier on the same occasion, and you have an illustration of what Laurier has had to face during a great part of his career. In 1905 the Quebec Castors were shrieking that he had betrayed his faith, while the electors of London were told in screaming headlines that "A Vote for Hyman Is a Vote for Laurier, Sharpe, and the Hierarchy." In 1910 the Quebec Nationalists are hooting him as a traitor to his race, while the mischief-makers of Ontario cry that he has shaped his naval policy to suit Quebec sentiment, and that he aims at separation from the Empire.

Laurier has triumphed over the creed bigots of both provinces. He will triumph over the race incendiaries, too.

STILL PLAYING DOUBLE.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

L'Evenement, the recognized organ of the Conservative party in Quebec city, an avowed supporter of Mr R. L. Borden, declares the Opposition is ready to make battle against the shameful imperial navy policy of the Laurier government." And at the same time Hon Robert Rogers, of Manitoba, is denouncing Laurier as an anti-Imperialist, and the Toronto News is asserting that "the Conservative party of Canada is essentially a British party, that "all its traditions are rooted in devotion to British connection," and that "all its aspirations are towards closer connection with the Empire."

With L'Evenement repudiate Mr Borden like Mr. Rodolphe Forget, or will Mr. Borden repudiate L'Evenement? Neither, of course. It would spoil the double game.

"No one questions the honest motives of those who advocate local option, or prohibition — not even we who brew Regal Lager. But the temperate folk who use Regal Lager as a daily beverage for health's sake, know how mistaken is the idea that so pure and tonic a drink is an intoxicant.

PRAISE FOR PROPRIETORS OF NEWMARKET HOTEL

The Newmarket Era gives the following interesting account of a banquet held in the Newmarket Temperance Hotel of which Mr. and Mrs. George H. Brown, formerly of the Chemong Park Hotel, are in charge.

On Friday evening of last week the shareholders of the Newmarket Temperance Hotel were entertained at a banquet given by the Directors in the spacious and modernized dining hall of the hotel, made further attractive by a profusion of pink carnations and ferns, as well as the ceiling electric light.

The menu was most tempting, including all the substantials and delicacies of the season, served by experienced waiters in such a manner that the excellent cuisine of Mrs. Brown was demonstrated to the full.

The spread was immediately followed by a splendid toast list, presided over by Hon E. J. Davis, in his usual affable manner.

After singing the National Anthem, the toasts to the several toasts were eloquently responded to as follows:

During the course of the evening very complimentary remarks were made by several speakers on the very satisfactory management of the hotel by Mr Geo H Brown and his estimable partner. A financial statement was also presented, showing that the business was proving a very satisfactory venture. A cheque for half-yearly interest at 6 per cent. was rather a surprise, as the hotel had only been running practically for four months.

The Directors decided to put $2,000 more stock on the market, and the shareholders were given the first opportunity. It is very gratifying to know that the stock was over-subscribed.

The hotel has been greatly enlarged and renovated throughout.

UNCLE WALT'S COLUMN

DOC CRIPPEN.

Poor Doc. Crippen, in his cell, shorn of every earthly hope, waits to bid the world farewell, waits the scaffold and the rope. British justice is severe, and its cog wheels seldom slip; when it dooms a man it's queer if he'll dodge the gallows trip. Old Doc Crippen sits alone, thinking of the gallows tree, of the chains that creak and groan, and his face is sad to see. And, perhaps, Doc Crippen sighs, as he marks the dragging time: "Had I 'neath my native skies, been convicted of this crime, I would not be plunged in woe; I'd be smoking free cigars, and the girls would come and throw handsome nosegays through the bars. And I would not need to fear that the end of things was close, bring lawyers by the year, I could dodge the hempen dose. I could spend each passing hour in a near approach to glee, planning for a speaking tour when my lawyers get me free. "Oh, my friends," perhaps he moans, "when you kill your wives, I pray, that you will not hide their bones in this blooming British clay! For the judges don't see the beauty of your joke, and the British juries won't do a thing but make you choke!"

GREATEST CURE FOR RHEUMATISM IS "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

"I Honestly Believe It," says Mr. Mills

Knowlton, P.Q., Oct. 12th, 1909.

For many years I suffered from severe Rheumatism and the attacks were very distressing and prevented me from doing my ordinary work.

I tried many remedies and physicians' treatments but nothing seemed to do me much good, and I was becoming very anxious for fear I would become a permanent cripple from Rheumatism.

I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and this medicine has entirely cured me, and I honestly believe that "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest Rheumatism Cure in the world.

E. E. MILLS,

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

About fifty yards farther on my left was Braster Grange. It stood a little way back from the road. Its gardens were enclosed by a thin stormbeny hedge, just thick enough to be a screen from the road. The entrance was along a lane which branched off here from the main road, and led on to the higher marshes, and thence on to the road from Braster village to Rowchester and my cottage. Straight on, the road which I was following led into Braster, but the lane to the left round past the Grange saved me fully half a mile. In an ordinary way I should never have hesitated for a moment as to my route. I knew every inch of the lane and though it was rough walking, there were no creeks or obstacles of any sort to be reckoned with. And yet, as I neared the corner, I came to a full stop. As I stood there in the road I felt my heart beating. I seemed possessed by a curious nerve failure. My breath came quickly. I felt my heart thumping against my side. I stood still and listened. Down on the shingles I could hear the sea come thundering in with a loud increasing roar, dying monotonously away at regular intervals. I could hear the harsh grinding of the pebbles, the backward swirl of long waves thrown back from the land. I heard the wind come booming across the waste lands, rustling and creaking amongst the few stunted trees in the grounds of Braster Grange. Of slighter sounds there seemed to be none. The village ahead was dark and silent, the side of the house fronting the road was black and desolate. It was a lonely spot, a lonely hour. Yet as I stood there shivering with nameless apprehensions, I felt absolutely certain that I was confronted by some hidden danger.

In a moment or two, I am thankful to say, my courage returned. I struck a match and lit a cigar, one of a handful which Ray had forced upon me. Then I crossed stealthily to the other side of the road, and felt for the hedge. I pricked my hands badly, but after feeling about for some moments I was able to cut for myself a reasonably thick stick. With this in my right hand, and the dispatch-box under my left arm I proceeded on my way.

I walked warily, and when I had turned into the lane which passed the entrance to Braster Grange I walked in the middle of it instead of skirting the wall which enclosed the grounds. I passed the entrance gates, and had only about twenty yards farther to go before I emerged upon the open marshland. Here the darkness was almost impenetrable, for the lane narrowed. The hedge on the left was ten or twelve feet high, and on the right were two low barns. I clasped my stick tightly, and walked almost stealthily. I felt that if I could come safely to the end of these barn buildings I could afford to laugh at my fears.

Suddenly my strained hearing detected what I had been listening for all the time. There was a faint but audible rustling in the shrubs overgrowing the wall on my left. I made a quick dash forward, tripped against some invisible obstacle stretched across the lane, and went staggering sideways, struggling to preserve my balance. Almost at the same moment two dark forms dropped from the shelter of the shrubs on to the lane by my side. I felt the soft splash of a wet cloth upon my cheeks, an arm round my neck, and the sickening odour of chloroform in my nostrils. But already I had regained my balance. I wrenched myself free from the arm, and was suddenly blinded by the glare of a small electric bandlight within a foot of my face. I struck a sweeping blow at it with my stick, and from the soft impact it seemed to me that the blow must have descended upon the head of one of my assailants. I heard a groan, and I saw the shadowy form of the second man spring at me. What followed was not, I believe, cowardice on my part, for my blood was up and my sense of fear gone. I lashed my stick straight at the approaching figure, and I leaped forward and ran. I had won the hundred yards and the quarter of a mile at Oxford, and I was in fair training. I knew how to get off fast, and after the first dozen yards I felt that I was safe. The footsteps which had started in pursuit ceased in a few minutes. Breathless, but with the dispatch-box safe under my arm, I sprinted across the marsh and never ceased till I reached the road. Then I looked back and listened. I could see or hear nothing, but from one of the top rooms in the Grange a faint but steady light was shining out.

CHAPTER XXI.

LADY ANGELA APPROVES

It was the only breath of fresh air which I had allowed myself all the morning, though the dazzling sunlight and the soft west wind had tempted me all the time. And now, as ill luck would have it, I had walked straight into the presence of the one person in the world whom I wished most earnestly to avoid. She was standing on the edge of the cliff, her hands behind her, gazing seawards, and though I stopped short at the sight of her, and for a moment entertained wild thoughts of flight, it was not possible for me to carry them out. A dry twig snapped beneath my feet, and, turning quickly round, she had seen me.

She came forward at once, and for some reason or other I knew that she was glad. She smiled upon me almost gaily.

"So this sunshine has even tempted you out, Sir Hermit," she exclaimed. "Is it not good to feel the Spring coming?"

"Delightful," I answered.

She looked at me curiously.

"How pale you are!" she said. "You are working too hard, Mr. Ducaine."

"I came down from London by the mail last night," I said. "I saw Colonel Ray—had dinner with him, in fact."

She nodded, but asked me no questions.

"I think," she said abruptly, that they are all coming down here in a few days. I heard from my father this morning."

I sighed.

"I have been very fortunate, Lady Angela," I said. "Your father is displeased with me. I think that but for Colonel Ray I should have been dismissed yesterday."

"Is it about—the Prince of Malora?" she asked in a low tone.

"Partly. I was forced to tell what I knew."

She hesitated for a moment, then she turned impulsively toward me.

"You were right to tell them, Mr. Ducaine," she said. "I have hated myself ever since the other night when I seemed to side against you. There are things going on about us which I cannot fathom, and sometimes I have fears, terrible fears. But your course is at least a clear one. Don't let yourself be turned aside by any one. My father has prejudices which might lead him into grievous errors. Trust Colonel Ray—no one else. Yours is a dangerous position, but it is a splendid one. It means a career and independence. If there should come a time even—"

She broke off abruptly in her speech. I could see that she was agitated, and I thought that I knew the cause.

"Lady Angela," I said slowly, "would it not be possible for you and Colonel Ray to persuade Lord Blenavon to go abroad?"

She swayed for a moment as though she would have fallen and her eyes looked at me full of fear.

"You think—that it would be better?"

"I do."

"It would break my father's heart," she murmured, "if ever he could be brought to believe it."

"The more reason why Lord Blenavon should go," I said. "He is set between dangerous influences here. Lady Angela, can you tell me where your brother was last night?"

"He was not at the house?"

"He dined at home. I think that he went out afterwards."

I nodded.

"And if he returned at all," I said, "I think you will find that it was after three o'clock."

She came a little nearer to me, although indeed we were in a spot where there was no danger of being overheard.

"What do you know about it?"

"Am I not right?" I asked.

"He did not return at all," she answered. "He is not home yet."

I had believed from the first that Blenavon was one of my two assailants. Now I was sure of it.

"When he does come back," I remarked grimly, "you may find him more or less damaged."

"Mr. Ducaine," she said, "you must explain yourself."

I saw no reason why I should not do so. I told her the story of my early morning adventure. She listened with quivering lips.

"You were not hurt, then?" she asked eagerly.

"I was not hurt," I assured her. "I was fortunate."

"Tell me what measures you are taking," she begged.

"What can I do?" I asked. "It was pitch dark, and I could identify no one. I am writing Colonel Ray That is all."

"That hateful woman," she murmured. "Mr. Ducaine, I believe that if Blenavon is really concerned in this, it is entirely through her influence."

"Very likely," I answered. "I have heard strange things about her. She is a dangerous woman."

We were both silent for a moment. Then Lady Angela, whose eyes were fixed seawards, suddenly turned to me.

"Oh," she cried, "I am weary of all these bothers and problems and anxieties. Let us put them away for one hour of this glorious morning. Dare you play truant for a little while and walk on the sands?"

"I think so," I answered readily, "if you will wait while I go and put Grooton in charge."

"I will be scrambling down," she declared. "It is not a difficult operation."

I joined her a few minutes later, and we set our faces toward the point of the bay. Over our heads the seagulls were lazily drifting and wheeling, the quiet sea stole almost noiselessly up the firm yellow sands. Farther over the marshes the larks were singing. Inland, men like tiny specks in the distance were working upon their farms. We walked for a while in silence, and I found myself watching my companion. Her head was thrown slightly back, she walked with all the delightful grace of youth, and strength; yet there was a cloud which still lingered upon her face.

"These," I said abruptly "should be the happiest days of your life, Lady Angela. After all, is it worth while to spoil them by worrying about other people's doings?"

"Other people's doings?" she murmured.

I shrugged my shoulders.

"Selfishness, you know, is the permitted vice of the young—and of lovers."

"Blenavon can scarcely rank amongst the other people with me," she said. "He is my only brother."

"Colonel Ray is to be your husband," I reminded her, "which is far more important."

She turned upon me with flaming cheeks.

"You do not understand what you are talking about, Mr. Ducaine," she said, stiffly. "Colonel Ray and I are not lovers. You have no right to assume anything of the sort."

"If you are not lovers," I said, "what right have you to marry?"

She seemed a little staggered, as indeed she might be, by my boldness.

"You are very mediaeval," she remarked.

"The mediaeval sometimes survives. It is as true now as then that loveless marriages are a curse and a sin," I answered. "It is the one thing which remains now as it was in the beginning."

She looked at me furtively, almost timidly.

"I should like to know why you are speaking to me like this," she said. "I do not want to seem unkind, but do you think that the length of our acquaintance warrants it?"

"I do not know how long I have known you," I answered. "I do not remember the time when I did not know you. You are one of those people to whom I must say the things which come into my mind. I think that if you do not love Colonel Ray you have no right to marry him."

She looked at me in the face. Her cheeks were flushed with walking, and the wind had blown her hair into becoming confusion.

"Mr. Ducaine," she said, "do you consider that Colonel Ray is your friend?"

"He has been very good to me," I answered.

"There is something between you two. What is it?"

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE!

Mothers Should Realize What Neglect of Skin-Troubles May Mean to Children.

A lifetime of disfigurement and suffering often results from the neglect, in infancy or childhood, of minor affections of the skin and scalp. A mother overlooks a little rash or attempts some simple treatment and in a day, perhaps, the little one is covered with severe eczema or a similar distressing eruption. Then the struggle for a cure begins.

A multitude of remedies are tried, doctor after doctor consulted and hospitals visited, but too often the suffering extends, without substantial relief, from days to weeks, weeks to months and months to years. Added to this is the ever-present fear that the itching, burning and disfiguration will become chronic, marring future welfare and making life miserable.

In the prevention of the simple skin troubles from which all this suffering so often arises and in establishing a condition of skin health that makes eruptions impossible, mothers are assured that nothing is purer, sweeter or more effective than Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. And greater still, if possible, is the success of these simple household remedies in the treatment of the severer skin affections themselves. With the first warm bath with Cuticura Soap and gentle application of Cuticura Ointment, the itching and burning of eczema cease, the child falls into a refreshing sleep, the mother rests and for the first time, possibly, in many weeks peace falls on a distracted household. Frequently a single cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are sufficient.

Positive as is this statement, it is justified by more than thirty years of pronounced success. To quote but a single instance, Robert Mann, of Proctor, Minnesota, says:

"Our boy was born in Toronto on Oct. 13, 1908, and when three months old a slight rash appeared on his cheek. What appeared to be a water blister would form. When it broke, matter would run out, starting new blisters until his entire face, head and shoulders were a mass of scabs and you could not see a particle of clear skin. We tried about every advertised remedy without avail, indeed some of them only added to his suffering and one in particular, the ——— Remedy, almost put the infant into convulsions. The family doctor prescribed for him and told us to bathe the baby in buttermilk. This did not do any good, so we took him to a hospital. He was treated as an out-patient twice a week and he got worse, if anything. We decided that it could not be cured and must run its course and so we just kept his arms bandaged to his side to prevent his tearing his flesh. We left Toronto and shortly after our arrival in Duluth, the Cuticura Remedies were recommended. We started using them in May, 1909, and soon the cure was complete. You would not think he was the same child for Cuticura made his skin perfectly clear and he is entirely free from the skin disease. There has been no return. We still use only Cuticura Soap for baby's bath."

Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Pills are sold by druggists everywhere. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, Mass., for a free copy of their latest 32-page Cuticura Book on treatment of skin diseases.

WIFE, 12 YEARS OLD MUST ENTER SCHOOL

Examiner Special.

DENVER, NOV 5.—"To James H Taylor: As the records of the Maria Mitchell School show that your wife (twelve years old) is not in school as required by the compulsory school law of the State, you are hereby notified that unless she is enrolled within five days, proceedings will be commenced against you in the County Court as contributing to juvenile delinquency, and that you will be liable to a fine and imprisonment, and the child may be sent to the State Industrial School for Girls."

The above order has been issued by Truancy Officer John Smith to compel the child-wife of James H Taylor to enroll as a pupil in the Denver public schools. Mrs. Taylor will probably be the only married woman studying in the lower grades in the West.

"Not even marriage," said School Superintendent Chadsey to-day, "can excuse a child under school age from attending classes. In this State the statutes make no provision for the supremacy of the husband in a case of this character."

Mrs. Taylor was Jennie Trammell. She was married by a Justice of the Peace to Taylor, a man thirty-five years old, who is a brother of the child's step-father. Her marriage several weeks ago created considerable indignation among the reformers of the city, who for a time threatened to go into court over the case.

DYSPEPSIA
Can Be Cured.

This disease is the all prevailing malady of civilized life, and one which oftenest baffles all ordinary treatment. It gives rise to a great variety of distressing symptoms, such as distress after eating, rising and souring of food, wind in the stomach, heartburn, etc.

Nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant; hence the great difficulty of effecting a cure.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

B.B.B. regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the saliva and gastric juice to facilitate digestion, purifies the blood, and tones up the entire system.

Mrs. Herman Dickens, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia, and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured, and I can now eat anything without it hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

Two Minute Talks About
PANDORA RANGE
for Coal or Wood

How It Will Save Fuel For You

OF course the Pandora Range is a few dollars more than an ordinary range. But it will soon pay for itself in the fuel it will save for you.

The Pandora Flue System and Wide Fire Box, designed by our brainy stove experts, save about half a ton of coal per year, because they supply more air than the flue systems and fire boxes of ordinary ranges, causing better combustion of fuel.

The Steel Oven saves some more fuel, because it heats up more rapidly than a cast iron oven. The heavy Fire Clay Coating on the main bottom of range prevents any heat wasting towards the floor. It drives the heat back into the oven, and thus saves still more fuel.

But the big economizing feature is this: The draft for cooking on top of the range is also the draft for baking in the oven. The heat does double duty and your fuel bill is largely reduced.

Get the Pandora---the range that pays for itself. No other range is high-class enough for you.

LADY ADBY TO WED A CLERK OF TWENTY

Examiner Special.

LONDON, NOV 5.—Society will be amused, but not surprised, at an engagement which shortly will be announced between Lady Adby and a youth, aged twenty, named Leonard Gibbons.

Lady Adby, who lost her husband, Sir William Adby, recently, is a rather massive but handsome woman about fifty years of age, with a somewhat striking past. The late Sir William figured in some very unsavoury law court proceedings dealing with his former matrimonial affairs, and in 1909, when in a paralytic state, he married the present Lady Adby. The ceremony was performed amid the jeers of a crowd, as the bridegroom had to be wheeled to the Registrar's office in a bath-chair.

Sir William left his wife nothing in his will, but made very handsome settlements on her before he died, and Lady Adby is now a rich woman. She astonished the world not long ago by offering the sum of $250,000 for the advancement of aviation in England, but so far there is no record of the amount having been paid. She took a violent fancy to Mr. Grahame White, the aviator, and gave a fancy price to be taken up as a passenger in an aeroplane.

Young Gibbons, who is a tall, well-built youth, was an obscure clerk down town. Last summer he met a well-known American, Leeds Waters, and became his companion-secretary. Mr. Waters introduced the young man to Lady Adby, and the two, who are now inseparable, are secretly engaged, but the announcement will not be made for some time.

ON TRIAL FOR DEATH OF MAN WHO IS NOW ALIVE

For the Third Time Engineer Accused of Murder Battles for Life---Letter From Alleged Victim Says He Will Not Come Back to Save Life of Slayer.

Special to the Examiner.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., NOV. 5.—With the third trial of Rudolph Tegeler set for December 5 and all the witnesses summoned, it is still declared that James R. Meadows, the man he is alleged to have killed is alive and now in Cuba. Letters have been received from a man who says he is Meadows. Meadows disappeared more than three years ago and a month later a body, that was identified as his, was found in a cornfield near the city. Tegeler had been a friend of the wife of Meadows and both were arrested for his murder.

The woman was acquitted. Tegeler was convicted and given a life sentence but the case was reversed. At the second trial, which began in September, it was declared that Meadows is still alive and had been seen in New Orleans. He had shipped men to Colon for telephone construction work on the Isthmus of Panama. The story was discredited to some account, but two of the jurors believed it and voted to acquit Tegeler, the young German charged with the murder of Meadows. Since then Meadows has been located again, this time in Cuba, at the house of a company with which the telephone line along the Canal is being built.

A photograph of the man in Cuba has been sent here and identified as a picture of Meadows. In a letter written by the man who says he is Meadows, the writer says he will never come back to the United States, not even to save the life of the man charged with his murder.

"I care nothing for any of them," the writer said, speaking of Tegeler and the woman known as Mrs. Lila Meadows, wife of the man supposed to have been murdered. Meadows, if it is he, says he was never legally married to the woman. The alleged murderer is a young engineer and stands in a most peculiar position. According to other witnesses apparently disinterested, the man who is charged with having been killed is alive, yet he cannot be brought back, and Tegeler apparently has no other way to convince the jury that his alleged victim is living. Tegeler is without funds and it is doubtful if he can raise a sum large enough to pay the expense of having the deposition of Meadows taken.

That Meadows is alive is the firm conviction of those who say they have seen him. A photograph of the man known as Meadows, and who is now living, has been identified by his sister, who was a witness against his alleged slayer.

Among those who are familiar with all the facts of the case, there is still some doubt of Meadows being alive. They say they saw his body after it was taken up from the grave in the cornfield. The dead man had the features and many other distinguishing marks, and it was identified as that of Meadows. If it was not his body, it had a close resemblance to him, and its presence in the cornfield may never be accounted for upon any other theory.

Another incriminating fact is that Tegeler had a party of searchers to the place where the body was buried and told them Meadows was buried there.

Y. M. C. A. Board Has A Successful Meeting Encouraging Reports

A very good meeting of the Board of the Y. M. C. A. was held last night at the Association building. On account of the fact that the Board Room has been turned into a class room for educational work, the meeting had to be held in room No. 3. This is a good sign, for it indicates that the educational work is becoming more important and aggressive.

Mr. J. C. Shook was in the chair, and the following members were present: Messrs. E. L. Goodwill, His Honour Judge Hoyles, C. F. Sisson, J. H. Connal, J. J. Howden, and Dr. J. E. Middleton.

The reports of the several departments were received, most of which showed progress. This was particularly true of the boys' work and the physical work departments. Certain improvements, badly needed, were authorized by the Board and a plan laid out by which it is hoped the Association will be able to finish its summer year free of all debt. The membership Committee had a number of new members to propose and reported that the Committee have done good work before the end of the year.

The Educational Department was pleased to report two classes which reach the men of the industrial class. A class in electricity meets once a week and a mechanical drawing class once a week. There is no doubt that these classes are meeting a great need in Peterborough.

The report of the Physical Committee showed that there is life in that department. The total number using that department during the month of October was 1,666. There are classes in wrestling, juniors, advanced and elementary, gymnasium, First Aid to the Injured, Life Saving, as well as in the several regular physical features.

GLASGOW SELECT CHOIR CONCERT A RARE TREAT

The first visit to Peterborough of the Glasgow Select Choir will be henceforth coincident with one of the most artistic and enjoyable musical programmes that it has ever been the good fortune of the people of this city to enjoy. Certainly there have been few better pleased audiences leaving the Grand than that which filed out of the Opera House at the conclusion of last night altogether delightful concert. The attendance was not as large as the reputation of the visiting organization, or the merit of the offering deserved, but what the audience lacked in numbers was more than counterbalanced by the warmness of their enthusiasm, and could they have had their way the programme of eighteen numbers would have been stretched to at least thirty-six. The choir took the audience by storm and the universal verdict was that scarcely anything so excellent in either part or solo singing has been heard here. A chorus of magnificent voices, splendidly trained and as splendidly controlled, the effect of the ensemble singing under the skilful direction of Mr. George Taggart, the conductor, resembled in the fortissimo passages, the notes of a church organ under the fingering of a master player, and in the pianissimo parts the throbbing of a violin beneath the bow of a virtuoso. Where crispness and accuracy of attack were called for, the members of the choir never failed to respond confidently and successfully, and in the more subdued passages there was sweet and sympathetic harmony that was altogether delightful. Each number of a long and varied programme was a gem, and the enthusiasm of the audience compelled Mr. Taggart to supplement his offering with several extra choruses. It was a demonstration of choral work such as Peterborough people unfortunately see few opportunities to hear and those who were present have every reason to congratulate themselves.

The programme was not entirely made up of choruses for solos, duets and trios were also rendered in part singing in a most pleasing manner. [illegible] demonstrated effectively that they are artists individually as well as collectively, the highest praise that can be given the solo numbers is that they came fully up to the standard of the choral work.

The ensemble numbers were varied in their character, and it would be a difficult matter to select the number in which the choir excelled, where every selection was so magnificently presented. The opening number, the stirring battle song "Scots Wha Hae" was sung spiritedly and effectively, and formed a fitting introduction, winning instantaneous favour, which was deepened by the sympathetic rendering the choir gave of their second number, the lament, "Bonnie George Campbell," the pathos of which was closely imitated by the feeling manner in which it was presented. The humorous chorus "The Barrin' of the Door" gave the choir an opportunity to show their versatility and they took full advantage of the opening to the appreciation of the audience. There was a spirit and vim to the rendition of "The MacGregor's Gathering" that called for an encore. Elgar's beautiful serenade "Stars of The Summer Night," charming alike in air and in sentiment, was one of the features of the choir's offering, the presentation being a truly remarkable piece of choral work. The lament "The Flowers of the Forest" was offered with the same feeling and delicate harmony that characterized the similar number in the first part of the programme, and the applause was so enthusiastic and long sustained that the choir had to sing "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton" as an encore. Another encore the chorus from "Rob Roy."

Tenor Solo in which the soprano [illegible] was artistically taken by Miss Leonora B. S. [illegible] who has a soprano voice of extensive range and remarkable clarity.

The rollicking song for male voices "The Dollar Ave" was an amusing and splendidly rendered number to which an encore had to be given.

Miss May Brown, who possesses a soprano voice of rich range, and [illegible] quality, won the hearts of the audience in her solo "Why I Left My Home," which was rendered with such unbounded enthusiasm that Miss Brown was compelled to sing again, giving a equally pleasing rendition of the old [illegible] Kelvin.

Miss Deserna Young, a sweet-voiced contralto, sang the pathetic old song "My Ain Folk" with a sympathy and pathos that [illegible] of her countrymen in the audience.

and she was forced to respond to an encore.

That stirring number "The March of the Cameron Men" furnished Mr. Peter Kerr with a splendid opportunity to display the qualities of a very fine baritone voice and he sang the old song with a spirit and fervour that [illegible].

Mr. Alex. Patterson, the possessor of a bass voice of unusual sweetness and purity, gave a most pleasing interpretation of the well-known song "When the Ebb Tide Flows."

The humorous duet "The Singing Lesson" by Miss Brown and Mr. Patterson, was a splendid number and merited the applause evoked by its presentation. The audience too, found most pleasing the trio "The Laughing Gypsies" by Messrs. Miller, Wallace and Johnson, and were not satisfied until an encore had been given.

Mr. Herbert R. Cross proved himself a most skilful accompanist, and his clever work at the keys was of most valuable assistance.

INSPIRING ADDRESSES WERE GIVEN AT THE ORANGE CONCERT MONDAY

At the Orange meeting on Monday [illegible] a number of eloquent addresses were given and the speakers were warmly received.

Rev. W. C. Rainford, in a short address said he was glad that he was present to participate in the honour to be paid to Sir Geo. Parker Day.

"We are still Britishers and we are still Protestants. There were two things in connection with the religion of the Roman Catholics that he did not agree with, and they were the pets of the Catholic church and the points these two things he would never agree with.

"While I revere and respect liberty and give every man the right to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience, still I do not believe in bowing down before the Pope. There is only one Pope, and that is the crucified Jesus the lowly carpenter of Nazareth, and the workingmen's best friend," said Mr. Rainford.

Mr. Reckford gave his reasons for objecting to the piety of the Roman Catholic religion. It was directly opposed to the fundamental tenets of our country, and to the belief that the priest is the ambassador of God, endowed with the power to forgive sins and give any man absolution.

"I believe," said he, "that I am as good as any priest on earth, and I do not see why I can't go to God myself. It is a mystery how a man can say he is clothed with all the power of God. If the Roman Catholics can believe that, let them believe it. When we come to gatherings such as these, as loyal Protestants we should think of the great legacy left us.

"The Eucharistic Congress held recently will be the greatest boon to Protestantism that we have had for some time. What if it is claimed that we have a soulless religion. In less than twenty years we shall show them that we have more soul than they ever dreamed of. In regard to the baneful controversy, the facts only ought to be taught in the schools. Why, even in China a decree has lately gone forth commanding English to be taught in all the schools in China.

In conclusion, said Mr. Rochford, let us pray that God will bless Canada with another Eucharistic Congress that we may be more zealous in the faith that we believe.

An address by Colonel Mulkins was the next feature. He was glad that it was in the mind of each to remember important facts in the history of the British race.

Where are the farmers of Rome today. Away back in the Vatican. Our [illegible] who met them have brought good out. They have built colleges, schools and churches. Look at the boys that have become famous! It is right that we meet to commemorate these important events. Where is the man today who has not more liberty than he had under the Roman Catholic rule?

Our heritage is bright and our motto is. Let us remember these principles down to generations yet unborn. The light of liberty we now enjoy. If we do not we are not fulfilling the obligation we should all feel is laid upon us."

Another stirring address given by Rev. Robert Pogue then followed Mr. Pogue spoke in a very forcible and plain manner and his words met with merited favour.

What with a Eucharistic congress, [illegible] and so on, one has had to look in order to find a subject. The question is often asked is Protestantism dying. Decidedly not. We must remember that the method of Protestantism is very much opposed to Roman Catholicism. Protestantism is not closed to synonymous with Christianity. Protestantism is placed in the world that it may secretly silently doing its work. Catholicism would attract more attention to itself by a great display of force. But is that a sign of its vitality. The Eucharistic congress was not a sign of the supremacy nor of the power of the Catholic church. The purpose before the eyes of the world was not to benefit us the principles of everybody while Protestantism was on without an [illegible] demonstration. When Protestants come together naturally think Protestantism is exciting. They say "See what a showing Catholicism can make and then look at Protestantism."

"But within the last two years," said the speaker "there has been an awful lot of talk of that kind to pass any Eucharistic congress but never to hold. I speak of the Livingstone Missionary Movement. For an evidence of the vitality and strength of Protestantism, look at it.

If Orangemen and Protestantism stand for anything they stand for Christianity.

"Yet Catholicism is not dying. The front page of the Sentinel reveals that fact. Read this paper, edited so ably and so full of articles both lucid and strong. It will convince you of the realism of Catholicism.

"Cardinal Vaughan told us that Protestantism was a soulless religion and that it made infidels.

"In the last few years there have been tens of thousands of converts from the Catholic church to Protestantism particularly in Austria. The fact that Catholicism is dying is bemoaned.

"Again vast numbers of Catholics while not found in the ranks of the Protestants, yet are no longer Catholics.

"Catholicism is doomed to die before the onward march of Christianity.

"One place where Catholicism is at stand, however, is in the politics of our country, where it is very much active.

The speaker held that while the Church of Jesus Christ as a Church should take a part in politics, still the most active and earnest Christian should, if they do take a part take their Christianity into that help with them. If this were done it would be better for the country at large.

Ald. Joseph Batt also made a brief speech full of loyalty to the Orange cause. He also told a couple of humorous incidents and put everybody in good humour.

Rev. Mr. Coon was down for an address but was unable to be present.

ROOSEVELT'S MAN GOES DOWN BEFORE DEMOCRAT IN N. Y. STATE

Opposition Gains Number Nine and Republican Two for National Representatives — Senate Majority Less.

DIX WINS OUT

New York, Nov. 9—Elections held throughout the United States yesterday resulted in a political revolution far-reaching in its effects, similar at many points to the tremendous tidal wave of Democratic victory two years ago, but apparently more widespread in its scope.

The indications are that the national house of representatives had been carried by the Democratic party by a majority of 45 to 50, while the Republicans may possibly have a majority in the senate as a result of legislative elections held in many states.

In New York state John A. Dix, Democratic candidate for governor, is elected over Henry L. Stimson, Republican, by a plurality of about 55,000, reversing the Republican plurality of 70,000 in 1908 for Gov. Hughes.

In New Jersey Woodrow Wilson, Democratic candidate for governor, is elected over Vivian M. Lewis, Republican, by about 12,000 plurality, reversing the previous Republican plurality of 54,000 for Gov. Fort.

In Massachusetts Eugene N. Foss, Democrat, candidate, has defeated Gov. Eben S. Draper, Republican candidate for re-election, by about 30,000 plurality.

In Connecticut, Judge S. E. Baldwin, Democratic candidate, is elected governor over Charles A. Goodwin, Republican, by a plurality of about 40,000.

In Ohio Gov. Judson Harmon, Democratic candidate for re-election, appears to have carried the state by

JOHN A. DIX

20,000 to 25,000 over Warren G. Harding, Republican candidate.

In New Hampshire Robert P. Bass, Republican candidate for governor, is leading Charles E. Carr, Democratic candidate, by about 5,000 plurality.

In Pennsylvania, the election of John K. Tener, Republican candidate for governor, is assured by a large plurality.

In Rhode Island Gov. Pothier, Republican candidate for re-election, is slightly in the lead over Lewis A. Waterman, Democrat, with a plurality much reduced from that of 1908.

In Tennessee, the fusion candidate, B. W. Hopper, is apparently elected by 15,000 plurality.

Democratic governors have been elected in Alabama and South Carolina.

In Iowa, the Democrats claim the election of Claude S. Porter for governor, but this is not yet conceded.

In Wisconsin, the election of the Republican candidate for governor, Frances C. McGovern, is claimed by a reduced majority, and the return of Senator Lafollette to the Senate is assured.

In Michigan, Chase S. Osborne, the Republican candidate for governor, appears to have a safe lead over L. T. Hegans, Democrat.

Chicago, Nov. 9. It is now well assured that the Democrats has gained control of the House of Representatives.

The known gains by Democrats are one in Connecticut, one in Kentucky, two in Maryland, one in Massachusetts, three in New York, and one in North Carolina, or a total of nine.

This is offset, however, by a gain by the Republicans of one congressional district in Pennsylvania and one in New York.

Returns indicated that the Democrats would probably gain three or four seats in Missouri, three in Iowa, one in North Carolina and five or six in Illinois, or enough to assure them a net gain of 22, now necessary for Democratic control of the House.

Might Have Been Arrested.

New York, Nov. 9.—United States Attorney-General J. G. Wickersham narrowly escaped arrest and arraignment in a police court yesterday.

Through either the ignorance or disregard of someone connected with the registry verification system, the law granting federal employes the right to vote from their last place of residence, no matter how long they have been absent, was ignored, and because Mr. Wickersham was not found at the number, 36 East Fifty-First street, where he lived before he went to Washington, his name was not duly placed on the challenge list, and a police man waited for him, so that he might be arrested if he appeared to vote.

Arrested Election Officials.

McAlester, Okla., Nov. 9. Charged with conspiracy to injure, oppress threaten and intimidate certain negro citizens, by refusing them the right to vote, half the election officials of McAlester were arrested by a deputy U. S. marshal yesterday, taken before U. S. commissioner, and held in bonds of $2,000 each.

The election officials were charged with refusing the negroes the right of suffrage without subjecting them to the test of writing or reading any section of the constitution.

Women Watched Polling Booths.

New York, Nov. 9. Miss Maude Ingersoll, daughter of the late Col. R. G. Ingersoll, was one of fifty women who yesterday acted as non-partisan watchers at the various polling places, under the auspices of the Equality League of Self-Supporting Women.

Hundreds of other women were out to-day taking an active part in the campaign, among them Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont and Mrs. Clarence Mackay. A number of prominent society and suffrage leaders donated autos, in which lunches were carried to the women watchers.

AGED WOMAN IS KILLED

Mrs. Joseph Nailor of 55 Jersey Avenue, Toronto, Is Found Dead at Doorway of Her Home, and Husband In Chair Gasping in Advanced Stage of Asphyxiation —He Is Taken to Hospital.

Toronto, Nov. 9. When Dr. Herbert Clutterbuck, Clinton street, was called to Joseph Nailor's home at 55 Jersey avenue, late night, he found Mrs. Sailor lying dead across the kitchen doorway at the back of a long hallway. The old man was sitting unconscious in a chair in the front room of the cottage, gasping for breath.

The physician had been summoned by a grandson, who said that he had gone into the house to see the old couple, and found them helpless. Dr. Clutterbuck ordered the man to be removed to the Western Hospital, and notified Chief Coroner Johnson of the death of the woman.

Coroner J. M. Cotton was appointed, and after an investigation last night decided that death was probably due to poisoning by coal gas, but that an inquest should be held.

When Dr. Clutterbuck arrived, the lights in the house were lit and the stove in the front room was burning cheerily. Neighbors had seen the old couple at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when they appeared in perfect health. The dead woman was 65 years and her husband 57 years of age.

The man is in a serious condition in the Western Hospital. He is a retired carpenter and builder, and is comfortably off.

More Chauffeurs Out.

New York, Nov. 9.—Although yesterday was expected to mark time in the strike of express company drivers and helpers, owing to the apparent disposition of the labor leaders to postpone consideration of the general strike question until after election, unexpected interest was injected into the sympathetic movement in aid of the strikers yesterday by the announcement that 1,000 additional taxicab chauffeurs had joined the strike. This made, according to Secretary Forster of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, a total of 2,300 chauffeurs on strike, despite the fact that 900 "taxi cabbies," employed for the most part by smaller companies, which had made agreements with their men, went back to work yesterday.

A Great Country.

Edmonton, Nov. 9.—That 250 miles of railway into the north country will open to civilization more than 2,000 miles of river and lake suitable for navigation by large steamers, is the opinion of W. Hays, capitalist, of Duluth, Minn., who has just returned from a trip into the Athabaska country with A. Velette, the man who is contesting the city's rights to use the Athabasca River for power purposes.

Mr. Hays gives a very complete survey of the country. He says there is timber enough there to supply western Canada for the next half century. Agricultural prospects could not be better, while copper, iron and gold are found, and also petroleum, asphalt, limestone and oil. Fishing could be developed into a great industry.

SWINDLED ESKIMOS

Kund Rasmussen, the Explorer, Sends Home the Statement of Missionaries Who Talked With Cook's Men—One of Them Says He Made Out a Lying Map—Cook Wrote All Through the Long Winter.

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook was further discredited in a special cable despatch to The Chicago Daily News yesterday from its correspondent in Copenhagen, Denmark. The story was the first publication of the report of Kund Rasmussen the Danish explorer, as sent by him to his wife in Copenhagen, and now given out by her.

Contained in the story is what purports to be the statements of Cook's two Eskimo companions in the polar quest, Itukusuk and Apilak, in which they confirm Commander Peary's charge that Cook traveled in a circle and never even approached the pole. Rasmussen is quoted as saying he himself did not interview the men, but their statements were taken by the Rev. Gustave Olsen and Katekets Eshmann Rosa-Bach, missionaries born in Greenland, and at the time of securing the statements working in the country from which Cook claimed to have started for the Pole.

This is part of the story told by the Eskimos:

"One day I, Apilak, came upon Dr. Cook sitting down and drawing a map. I looked at it and asked him, 'Whose route are you drawing?' 'My own,' replied Dr. Cook, but that was a lie, because he drew the map a long way out at sea, where we never had been. The small rivers had only begun to break when we reached Hell's Gate.

"We caught walrus, musk ox and bears all that winter. With the bow we killed only two hares. We had a gun to kill musk ox and bear, as to kill a musk ox with the bow is impossible. It was a fine autumn and had good provision for the winter.

"During the dark time we were inside most of the time making clothes. Dr. Cook wrote all the time. At first sight of the sun we started home.

"Dr. Cook, during the journey, promised us a good reward, but he proved himself a liar and swindled us out of the payment. We did not get the guns he promised us. These he sold for fox skins. He gave us only a knife, some matches and a useless boat. This is all we, Itukusuk and Apilak, have to tell of our journey with the great Dr. Cook."

Hope of More Complete Union.

London, Nov. 9. (C.A.P. Cable.)—Joseph Chamberlain, in a letter to Lord Ridley re the annual meeting of the Land Reform League at Manchester, referring to the preference says: "I hope the preference is in deed a hope of the more complete union of our colonies, and unless this is secured at the next colonial conference, it may be too late to influence those whom we have to deal with. They have shown a willingness to meet us half way, which is very promising for our trade and our country, but they will not forever wait up on us.

"We should take the advantage which the conference offers once more or we may find it too late. The present is the time given for our decision, and I hope we shall no longer show ourselves unwilling to make the change our colonies have already made."

Mayor Unseated.

Smith's Falls, Nov. 9.—Judgment was given Monday by Judge Senkler in the action brought by John Smith to disqualify Mayor McCallum of Smith's Falls, on the grounds of irregularity in selling cement to the town. It is in favor of the plaintiff, and Mr. McCallum is unseated and ordered to pay the costs of the case.

No election will be held to fill the office of mayor. The judge made no direction regarding it, and in the absence of an order the council has authority to elect a chairman for the remainder of the year. At Monday night's meeting Mr. J. S. Gould was appointed. No acts of the town are invalidated by reason of the mayor's disqualification.

Does Not Count.

London, Nov. 9. William O'Brien, interviewed, said that T. P. O'Connor, having been on Canadian ground, and being, above all things, a faithful English Liberal, has hitherto stuck consistently to his instructions from the Liberal whip, but he says O'Connor does not greatly count, and will be either repudiated or will repudiate himself at the word of command.

Burned to Death.

St. Armand Station, Que., Nov. 9.—About three o'clock yesterday morning a fatal fire occurred near Morse's line, Missisquoi County, when Frank Pecor, was burned to death. Pecor, who worked for Mr. Titemore, was 17 years of age, and although awakened did not manage to get out of the house in time. His charred remains were found yesterday morning.

No Car Strike.

Philadelphia, Nov. 9.—At three o'clock yesterday afternoon it was announced that the arbitrators had reached an agreement on the interpretation of "loyal men," which has caused friction between the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. and its union men. It is stated that the agreement will satisfy both sides and end all talk of a strike.

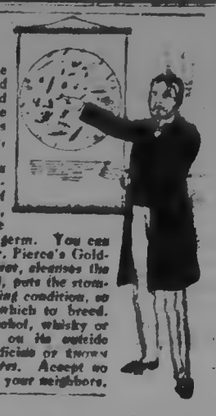
Hotel Changes Hands.

Massey, Nov. 9.—The Clifton House here, of which Mr. Neil Brown has been proprietor for many years, is about to change hands. Mr. Brown now has the Gladstone House in Orillia. Mr. Charles Brown, at present manager of the King Edward Hotel at Sudbury, takes control of the Clifton House on the 15th of this month.

Died In India.

Belleville, Nov. 9.—Word has been received here of the death of Jos. T. Warrington, which occurred at Singapore, India. Deceased was at one time a resident of this city, and a member of the firm of Warrington & Son, prominent cheese exporters of this country.

Afraid of Ghosts



Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known composition and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

Objects Of Canadian Club---Col. Denison To Speak To-morrow Night

The men of the city are reminded of the first dinner and address of the Canadian Club at the National Hotel to-morrow night, when Col. George T. Denison of Toronto, will speak on "Canada and her future." It might be well, since this is the first meeting, to say something of the objects of the club. The purpose of Canadian Clubs is to foster patriotism, to encourage the study of Canadian institutions, history, arts, literature, and the resources of Canada, by endeavouring to unite Canadians in such work as is for the welfare and progress of the Dominion. Any man who is eighteen years of age and a British subject by birth or naturalization, and who is in sympathy with the objects of the Club, is eligible for membership.

Any desirous of becoming members, and there should be a large number, may secure tickets from Mr. W. R. Morris, Water street, or at the Hotel National to-morrow evening.

Col. Denison is an eloquent speaker, and everyone who can should avail himself of the opportunity of hearing him.

Spalding, emblematic of the championship, is prominently displayed, as is the trophy from the same firm. A lacrosse stick with a history of hockey stick that has seen service and other sporting souvenirs go on view. Could Not Rest at Night.
Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

Heed the warning, cure the weak, lame, aching back and dispose of any chances of further trouble.

If you don't do this serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Pugh, Parkdale, Man., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them and I am not the same weak woman I was before. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Turning the Tables.

Ottawa, Nov. 9.—Allegations have been made by the Ottawa press against Hull, on account of accusations of allowing gambling. Chief Marshall of Hull, an old Ottawa policeman, comes back by saying: "The authorities consider that they are doing everything possible to elevate the morals of the city, and do away with many existing evils. There is plenty of scope for investigation in Ottawa, where gambling in pool rooms, and in regular gambling houses is a frequent occurrence. Further, a Hull man is prepared to state that he has five of these gambling machines, which are played for quarters, rented to different parties in the capital."

Procedure at Coronation.

London, Nov. 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—At the coronation on June 22, the Canadian Associated Press understands that as to the procedure of the ceremony the king will adhere to precedent. There will be no disposition to excel in any of the historic characteristics by adding courtly or military displays. The only possible alteration to the program will arise from any specially expressed desire from the overseas dominions to be more comprehensively represented.

Six Inches of Snow at Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, Nov. 9. A heavy storm, which swept down from Lake Superior Monday night, brought about six inches of snow, with every appearance of winter setting in early. Ice is forming on the smaller lakes, landlocked bays, and rivers, and there is some sleighing and skating here already.

Eczema Is Not Fatal

Dr. Chase's Ointment

But its Torture Increases as it Spreads Over the Body Until it Makes Life a Burden. It is Cured by

So many have eczema of one form or another and do not know it. The constant itching annoys them, but they scarcely realize how the diseases is gradually spreading and becoming more aggravated.

Particularly during cold weather, when exposed to sudden changes and dampness, this ailment becomes more severe, and during the night, when the body is warm, suffering is intense and sleep almost impossible.

There is cure in the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. This healing, soothing preparation brings almost instant relief from the distressing itching.

In the course of a few days the healing process sets in, and it is only a question of time and persistent application of the ointment until cure is effected.

Mr. Fred W. Clark, Petworth, Addington county, Ont., writes: "My mother had eczema in both legs for a long time, and tried everything for it, but got no relief until a friend advised her to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, which she got.

"She found that Dr. Chase's Ointment gave her great relief, so she got some more and continued this treatment faithfully, until now she is entirely cured of eczema. I don't think anyone could have this disease worse than she did."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on every box of his medicine.

AN APOLOGY

Following the announcement in our 5th Anniversary Annex Dodger of a sale of 200 Sample Blouses on sale sharp at 8.15 this morning—the rush was so great that the lot of blouses lasted only a short while at the ridiculously low price of 25c each and hundreds of our Annex patrons were disappointed.

The count was nearly one half over what we advertised but we hardly anticipated so great a crowd at this season of the year. However we wish to extend our apology to the disappointed public for not being able to supply all and hope that the other equally big values served to satisfy them to some degree.

We might here state that the 300 some odd blouses were sold out in less than 35 minutes from the time the sale commenced. It pays to be early at the Bargain Annex.

This was followed with Scripture

Solo—Miss Hall.

Address—Rev. Mr. Lampany, of Bombay Telugu mission, India. In the short time given to him Mr. Lampany gave a most interesting talk on the work in India, touching on several most important points. He said the population of India was 300,000,000. The number of Christians was 3,000,000. In 1906 there were 4,000 missionaries there and among the population into parishes ... (1,000,000) ... to each parish. The church was in great need of true Gospel missionaries. In closing Mr. Lampany asked to repeat a verse of Scripture in the native language. He gave John 3:16. He also sang, at request, "Jesus Loves Me."

Solo—Mrs. Hazlewood.

The meeting closed with prayer by Mr. Lee.

ALTERED STATEMENT

Examiner Special.

DENVER, Nov. 5.—For twenty years Miss Julie Donnelly went about her neighbours in the offices of the Ancient Order of United Workmen in this city. She had become a trusted bookkeeper at a salary of $100 a month, when the alteration of some figures in the proof of a financial statement after it had been O.K.'d by her superior, led to an investigation.

She admitted, it is alleged, that she had altered the statement to cover a shortage in her accounts amounting to $17,000, all taken in the last three years of her service.

"I could not help it," she said. "I crave fine clothes, rich meals, automobiling and the means to help my friends. The opportunity to seize all these things was so easy I could not resist it."

Her brother and a few friends paid $4,000 to the order and she was allowed to go free. She is said to be living in Harrisburg, Pa., with a sister.

SERIOUS RIOTS RAGE IN MEXICO CITY
UNITED STATES RESIDENTS ARE KILLED

Flag Torn Down and Spat Upon Americans Are Assaulted on the Street.

ASK PROTECTION

Special Wire to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, NOV. 10.— Uncle Sam turned his attention from internal politics to international complications this morning when an appeal for protection was received from United States citizens in Mexico City, following a concentrated attack on them by Mexicans, coupled with gross insults to the Stars and Stripes. It seems the Mexicans in the Capital are much incensed at the burning of Rodriguevez, their fellow countryman, for assaulting a woman and proceeded to wreak vengeance on the Americans in Mexico City. They were assaulted on streets, women were insulted and the American flag torn down and spat upon. The authorities here will probably demand an explanation from Mexico. "El Imparcial," a newspaper which advised against the disorders had its premises wrecked by the mob. Mounted police are now in control. Two or three persons who made demonstrations against United States were shot on sight. Rioting still continues. Two Americans were killed and one lynched, while a child was killed when the mob stoned a street car.

All Talking Well

A Pleasure to Have Such a Gentleman With us is the Expression of Those Being Treated by Dr. Rivenburg

A representative of the Examiner made a second visit yesterday to class under treatment with Dr. Rivenburg, for stammering and speech impediment, and was really surprised at the improvement made since the last visit of about a week ago.

In several of the cases to any one but Dr. Rivenburg, it appears as if it would be miraculous that a cure could be effected or in fact any improvement made, but Dr. Rivenburg's system has done wonders and some of the patients are so well advanced as to make it possible for them to converse with very little sign of their former trouble.

Dr. Rivenburg is meeting with success here and states his intention of remaining in the city until every case he takes under treatment is cured. Those who are anxious to be cured of stuttering, stammering, etc., should consult with Dr. Rivenburg at once, at the Oriental Hotel.

Waited Upon the Provincial Board

There were present the chairman, Dr. Sheard; Dr. Beeman, Newmarket; Dr. Hall, Chatham; and Dr. McCullough, Chief Health Officer.

A large deputation was present from South Monaghan complaining of a nuisance said to be caused by the sewage of the city of Peterborough, which is poured into the Otonabee river. The deputation was advised to interview the Council of Peterborough and ask them to so treat their sewage as to do away with such nuisance. In the event of the Council failing to act the board pledged itself to give relief.

TUMOR OF YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winnipeg, Man.—"Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth in the uterus. The doctors said it was a tumor, and could not be removed, as it would cause instant death. They found that other organs were affected and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in. After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. ORILLA BRADLEY, 384 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills.

WILL HE STAY SNUBBED?

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt must now realize that others besides himself have opinions, and that the still small voice of the ballot box counts far more than pyrotechic wind jamming. The result of the election is a tremendous squelch for the terrible Teddy, and except among his immediate partizans he does not get much pity. He was given the highest place in the gift of the citizens of the United States, and in conformity with practice, was expected to drop with dignity into a private life. He chose, rather, to embroil himself in the thick of party politics, and it is a question whether he was moved by vanity or self seeking. Patriotism did not need that he should take extraordinary means of self-advertising; that he should take a hunting tour in Africa, with every shot recorded, as in a rifle match, and bulletined in magazine and newspaper; it did not need that he should arrange a tour of Europe and distinguish himself as a vulgar meddler and busy body in matters that were not his concern; it did not need that he should discredit the precedents of all other past presidents of the United States, and place himself in the centre of the stage—assume the role of dictator, take the reins out of the hands where they belonged. If Roosevelt was rough-riding for a fall he has got what he was rough-riding for. Whether he will take the lesson is doubtful. Will his overpowering vanity, self-sufficiency and ambition permit him to know when he is rebuffed? Will he, like our own Foster—refuse to stay kicked out of the party, and continue a noxious and disturbing element?

PILES Dr. Chase's Ointment is a certain and guaranteed cure for each and every form of Itching, Bleeding and Protruding Piles. A testimonial in the press and by letter from each person who uses it. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The present political situation in the United States serves to show the superior position of the people as Canada as factors in the government of the country. In Canada under a corresponding vote with that of Tuesday, the government would have been defeated, would have bowed to the will of the people and vacated office. The United States electors declared an emphatic denunciation of President (Premier) Taft and his cabinet. The opponents of the president and his cabinet have a majority of 60 in the House of Representatives. Will Taft and his cabinet resign? By no means. He and his cabinet are in office for two years more and no power on earth no declaration of want of confidence on the part of the people will budge them. The House of Representatives may pass laws, and President Taft, if he chooses, can with impunity, so far as his official position is concerned veto them—stifle the voice of the people as expressed through their representatives, whose laws cannot become laws except by a two-thirds vote over the president's veto of the two houses that constitute the Congress. So that, theoretically, for the next two years the people of the United States might as well be in Russia, so far as the carrying out of their will is concerned. It is to be remembered that neither the President nor his Cabinet sits in Congress. For four years they have absolute autocratic power, whose exercise for good or ill depends upon their conceptions of their duty to the public welfare. Though President Taft has the power to act, without regard to the policy endorsed by the people in the late elections, it is probable that he has too much good sense too keen a sense of the temper of the people to use his power of veto unwisely. But every president may not be a Taft, and it seems safer to have responsible government as we have it in Canada. We don't boast much of the power of the people, but with us it is a real power. The people can get the government and the kind of government they vote for. No government can hold office in Canada for twenty-four hours, after the people, through their representatives, have declared their want of confidence.

THEIR MOTIVE REVEALED.

There seems to be only one explanation of the practical sympathy and cooperation of a considerable element of the Conservative party with the Nationalist Empire-wrecking, harmony-disturbing campaign in Drummond and Arthabaska. It is "anything to beat Laurier." Let British connection tumble in ruins, let Canadian harmony of citizenship resolve itself into chaos, only let Laurier fall entangled in the wreck. The Montreal Herald has collected a few opinions of Conservatives which may well serve as straws to show the way the wind sets.

"It is instructive," remarks the Herald, "to note how the various spokesmen of the Conservative Opposition take the result in Arthabaska. They seem to have quite forgotten their recently advertised role of putting country before party. In brief, their appreciations are these:

R. L. Borden—Laurier beaten at his own game.

Robert Rogers — All over with Laurier.

C. E. Foster—Serves Laurier right.

Dr. Daniel, M. P.—Sees Laurier's finish.

Chief Whip Perley — Laurier has lost his grip.

Senator Landry—Laurier has lost his hold.

Toronto Mail—Quebec will slump from Laurier.

Halifax Herald — Laurier down and out.

St. John Standard — Laurier has lost control

Charlottetown Examiner — Quebec has broken from Laurier.

Of course, what is uppermost in the minds of all these is something very much above mere partisanship. After a while they will say so. But meantime they have blurted out the truth about what is, for them, the one big concern. And now everybody knows where they stand."

Then you have it; "anything to down Laurier," but no lamentations springing from the deep heart of "country and empire before party."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"Jim" Jeffries and "The Terrible Teddy" are in the same class—neither of them could "come back."

The Toronto News reads the following lecture to its party: "Canadian politicians should also understand that any attempt to maintain an alliance with Quebec Nationalists means loss and discredit in the other Provinces."

THE NAVY QUESTION.

(Montreal Witness.)

Unquestionably a campaign of instruction on the subject of the navy is needed in this province if the appeals of the Nationalist leaders are to be properly met. As a matter of fact, too, instruction on the subject is still needed in other provinces and among English-speaking people. While it is true that the general consensus of opinion in the country at large was that it was Canada's duty to contribute in some form or other to the defence of the Empire, it is equally certain that to very many the new policy did not appeal. Anyone who can remember the common attitude of mind in Canada and the United States with regard to foreign wars forty or even twenty-five years ago, knows that the general sense of the people was that both countries were so situated that they could keep out of foreign complications, and that it was the part of wisdom to keep out of them. There was a good deal of truth in the attitude. It was a definite spirit of anti-militarism, and was accompanied by a reliance for defence in case of need upon the courage and patriotism of the citizens. Freed from thoughts of war and conquest, the work of citizenship would be confined to the development of the resources, the trade and commerce, and in its higher aspects, to the building up of the character and the institutions of the country. But time has wrought some changes which call for a reconsideration of this policy. We have to face some serious facts to-day which make it necessary for the country not, indeed, to embark upon the militarism of Europe, but to take steps in the direction of modern preparation for defence. Both Canada and the United States are obliged to realize that with an awakened and modern Japan, an awakening China, and a heavily armed Europe, it is impossible to disregard the eventuality of either or both countries becoming directly involved. The usual answer to this is that if we will wear the garments of peace we will be left in peace, and that the preparation for defence is the certain means of courting aggression.

The argument is entitled to deference, but is it one that we can fall back upon as an excuse for inaction, in face of all circumstances, and retain our self-respect? After every allowance has been made for the exaggerations and nervousness of sensational imperialists, there is not the slightest doubt that the position of Europe is menacing to-day, and that the menace is above all directed against the supremacy of Great Britain. The expenditure on armament by the British taxpayer has increased enormously, until it is now a burden. It is such a burden that the different members of the Empire were asked whether or not they were prepared to share it. We share the benefit of the armament; we have long shared it: shall we share the cost of it? A manly answer had to be given one way or another. As far as Canada was concerned, both the Government and the Opposition were agreed on the general principle that the time had come for Canada to take up its share of the burden. It is just here, however, that many people, not followers of Mr. Bourassa, disagree both with the Government and the Opposition. They argue that we did not need the nucleus of a navy, and that a contribution to the imperial navy would be equally unnecessary. They hold that we should have kept entirely clear from the question of imperial defence, presumably until such time as we ourselves were actually attacked. The position of those who argue in this way would be logical or at least more logical, if they were believers in immediate independence. But apparently they are not. They are simply believers in sharing the benefits of imperial connection without sharing its responsibilities. The conviction still lacking on the part of many is that a share in imperial defence is a political and moral obligation.

AN IMPORTANT EXPERIMENT IN INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION

(Winnipeg Free Press.)

Three years ago a teacher in the city of Rochester, N.Y., who was interested in industrial education, made an investigation into the conditions and future prospects of the boys attending the higher grades of the elementary schools of that city. He found that 14 per cent. of these boys were 14 years old or over, were not expecting to go forward to the high schools, and were on the point of dropping out to go to work. They were about to enter that critical period of life from fourteen to sixteen, during which the schools find it so difficult to hold them and the industries do not want them, a period which has come to be known as the "wasted years."

Interviews with superintendents and foremen in the local factories brought out the fact that for advantageous entrance into industry with fair prospects of rapid advancement, the boys should have (1 practice in the use of mathematical principles in actual shop problems, (2) a general knowledge of (a) materials, (b) process of manufacture, (3) a working acquaintance with the tools used in these processes and some skill in their use, (4) ability to use time to the best advantage.

A circular letter containing a prospectus of a proposed industrial school was sent to school principals, and to the parents of those boys who might be expected to enter. As a result one hundred boys at once applied for admission; and during the last eighteen months three vocational schools, two for boys and one for girls, have been established. An account of one of these, the Rochester Shop School, No. 24, the first school to be established in New York state under the new industrial education law, is given in the September issue of the Elementary School Teacher.

There are four departments in the school at the present time; carpentry, cabinet-making, electrical and plumbing. In each of these there are 26 boys. The staff of teachers includes a principal, four shop instructors, an instructor in drawing, and a class-room teacher. Only two of these departments have been in operation long enough to judge the cost of the experiment. From December 1908 to January 1910, the total cost of the cabinet-making and electrical departments was $9,404.92. But this amount was reduced by $2,939.64 the value of the work performed by the pupils, leaving $6,465.28 as the net cost.

The work done by the pupils, it is important to notice, is limited to the production of such articles as are needed in the schools, and as the school board would otherwise purchase. But such work must have educational value, and many articles are rejected, because the making of them would teach the boys little or nothing. They make bookcases, clock-chests, music cabinets, tables, umbrella racks, manual training benches, sewing boxes, drawing board-bench rests, saw-horses, saw-boxes, and the like. Also much of the installation and repair work in the various school buildings about the city is done by groups of boys sent out from the shop school. They set the fire alarm system aright when it went wrong, they put up guards on the lights for basket ball, they repaired the lighting circuit when necessary they kept in order the intercommunicating telephone system, they built and made the connections for a sink they built lockers for the teachers, they erected a portable school house in the rear of the shop school. They have replaced telephones, put in buzzers, repaired gongs, installed spot lights. In the drafting room, the boys make the designs, working-drawings, tracings, and blue prints of the articles to be constructed in the shops, and of the work called for in the various school buildings.

Fifteen hours weekly are devoted to shop work. To mathematics are given four hours; to drawing five hours, and to English and History, industrial history, very properly six hours. The work of the class room is very largely individual, a circumstance which will simplify greatly the problem of finding suitable situations for the boys. The local labour unions are kept fully informed regarding the plans and methods of the schools, and the friendliest spirit is maintained on both sides. The first real test of the value of this training will come when the boys enter the industries. Care will be taken to keep track of each graduate of the school, and improvements in the course of study will be determined largely by the reports of his work.

GEORGE STREET

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"It is not my secret," I told her.

"There is a secret then," she murmured. "I knew it. Is this why you do not wish me to marry him?"

"I have not said that I do not wish you to marry him," I reminded her.

"Not in words. You have no need to put it into words."

"You are very young," I said, "to marry any one for any other reason save the only true one. Some day there might be some one else."

She watched the flight of a seagull for a few moments—watched it until its wings shone like burnished silver as it lit upon the sun-gilded sea.

"I do not think so," she said, dreamily. "I have never fancied myself caring very much for any one. It is not easy, you know for some of us."

"And for some" I murmured, "it is too easy."

She looked at me curiously, but she had no suspicion as to the meaning of my words.

"I want you to tell me something," she said, in a few minutes. "Have you any other reason beyond this for objecting to my marriage with Colonel Ray?"

"If I have," I answered, slowly, "I cannot tell it you. It is his secret not mine."

"You are mysterious," she remarked.

"If I am," I objected, "you must remember that you are asking me strange questions."

"Colonel Ray is too honest," she said, thoughtfully, "to keep anything from me which I ought to know."

I changed the conversation. After all I was a fool to have blundered into it. We talked of other and lighter things. I exerted myself to shake off the depression against which I had been struggling all the morning. By degrees I think we both forgot part of our troubles. We walked home across the sandhills, climbing gradually higher and higher, until we reached the cliffs. On all sides of us the coming change in the seasons seemed to be vigorously asserting itself. The plovers were crying over the freshly-turned ploughed fields, a whole world of wild birds and insects seemed to have imparted a sense of movement and life to what only a few days ago had been a land of desolation, a country silent and winterbound. Colour was asserting itself in all manner of places—in the green of the sprouting grass, the shimmer of the sun upon the sea-stained sands, in the silvery blue of the Braster creeks. Lady Angela drew a long breath of content as we paused for a moment at the summit of the cliffs.

"And you wonder," she murmured, "that I left London for this!"

"Yes, I still wonder," I answered. "The beauties of this place are for the lonely—I mean the lonely in disposition. For you life in the busy places should just be opening all her fascinations. It is only when one is disappointed in the more human life that one comes back to Nature."

"Perhaps then," she said, a little vaguely, "I too must be suffering from disappointments. I have never realized——"

We had taken the last turn. My cottage was in sight. To my surprise a man was standing there as though waiting. He turned round as we approached. His face was very pale, and the back of his head was bandaged. He carried his arm, too, in a sling. It was Colonel Mostyn Ray!

CHAPTER XXII.

MISS MOYAT MAKES A SCENE

Ray was smoking his customary enormous pipe, which he deliberately emptied as Lady Angela and I approached. The sight of him and the significance of his wounds reduced me to a state of astonishment which could find no out let in words. I simply stood and stared at him. Lady Angela, however, after her first exclamation of surprise, went up and greeted him.

"Why, my dear Mostyn," she exclaimed, "wherever have you sprung from, and what have you been doing to yourself?"

"I came from London—newspaper train," he answered.

"And your head and arm?"

"Thrown out of a hansom last night," he said grimly.

We were all silent for a moment. So far as I was concerned, speech was altogether beyond me. Lady Angela, too, seemed to find something disconcerting in Ray's searching gaze.

"My welcome," he remarked quietly, "does not seem to be overpowering."

Lady Angela laughed, but there was a note of unreality in her mirth.

"You must expect people to be surprised, Mostyn," she said, "if you treat them to such surprises. Of course I am glad to see you. Have you seen Blenavon yet-"

"I have not been to the house," he answered, "I came straight here."

"And your luggage?" she asked.

"Lost," he answered tersely. "I only just caught the train, and the porter seems to have missed me."

"You appear to have passed through a complete chapter of mishaps," she remarked. "Never mind! You must want your lunch very badly, or do you want to talk to Mr. Ducaine?"

"Next to the walk up to the house with you," he answered, "I think that I want my lunch more than anything in the world."

Lady Angela smiled her farewells at me, and Ray nodded curtly. I watched them pass through the plantation and stroll across the Park. There was nothing very loverlike in their attitude. Ray seemed scarcely to be gleaning towards his companion and Lady Angela had the air of one absorbed in thought. I watched them until they disappeared, and then I entered my own abode and sat down mechanically before the lunch which Grooton had prepared. I ate and drank as one in a dream. Only last night Ray had said nothing about coming to Braster. Yet, there he was, without luggage, with his arm bound up. Just like this I expected to see the man whom I had struck last night.

Now, though Ray's attitude towards me was often puzzling, an absolute faith in his honesty was the one foundation which I had felt solid beneath my feet during these last few weeks of strange happenings. This was the first blow which my faith had received, and I felt that at any cost I must know the truth. After lunch I finished the papers which, when complete, it was my duty to lock away in the library safe up at the house, and secured them in my breast-pocket. But instead of going at once to the house I set out for Braster Junction.

There was a porter there whom I had spoken to once or twice. I called him on one side.

The Patient Brain

A Tireless Worker So Long as Supplied With Rich, Red Blood.

The brain is one of the most patient and industrious organs of the body. It can be induced, by good treatment, to perform prodigies of work.

But it is sensitive and will not brook abuse. It responds to the lash at first, but if the lash is laid on too hard it balks.

The brain insists on having plenty of good, red blood wherewith to renew its waste and from which to manufacture the nerve force supplied to the whole body.

Nervous trouble is generally brain trouble, and no suffering is to be compared to mental suffering, with the accompanying dread, suspicion and melancholy.

One-fifth of the blood in the human body is consumed by the brain, so make the blood rich and red by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and you will overcome diseases of the nerves.

There is no other way. Stimulants arouse false hope. Narcotics deaden the nerves, and temporary relief is followed by a condition which is worse than the first.

Get the blood right and the nervous system will adjust itself. Headaches will disappear; irritability will go, digestion will improve, and weakness and despondency will give place to new hope and courage, new vigor and energy.

Mrs. Geo. Fuller, Lakeland, Man., writes: "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of nervous headache, from which I was a great sufferer, and I am no longer troubled with twitchings of the nerves in the arms and legs."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food will enable you to avoid such extreme nervous trouble as prostration and paralysis, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

HOW CHRONIC COUGHS

Are Being Cured by Vinol—An Account of One Case

New Haven, Conn.—"I was troubled with a most persistent chronic cough or a long time and had tried so many remedies and prescriptions without benefit that I was discouraged. I was persuaded by my friends to try Vinol. I must say that I had little confidence, but I made up my mind to give it a fair trial. Before I finished my first bottle of Vinol I commenced to notice an improvement in my general condition. After taking the second bottle, my cough left me, and I must say I never felt better in my life,—all due to the use of Vinol. I can also recommend Vinol to anyone in a run down condition as the best possible remedy." (Name furnished on request.)

It is the combined action of the medicinal elements of the cods' livers aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron which makes Vinol so efficient in curing chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis—at the same time holding up the weakened, run down system. Vinol contains no oil and tastes good.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

BY SMALL LAMPS IN THROAT AN OBSTRUCTION WAS DISCLOSED

Special to The Examiner.

TOLEDO, NOV. 10.—Tiny electric bulbs enabled a Toledo physician to see down a woman's throat into the lower lobe of the right lung and to insert through the trachea extensible forceps and remove a fragment of a tooth from the right lung of Mrs. G. Cole of Van Wert, without doubt saving her life.

Last February, while under the influence of an anaesthetic, Mrs. Cole had several teeth extracted. Later on her health began to fail and her symptoms pointed to tuberculosis.

Certain features of the case indicated the possibility of some foreign substance being in the lung, and an X-ray examination proved that a portion of a tooth as large as one's little finger nail, had slipped down into the lung.

BEST LADY SKATER

Miss Violet Wheeler was the winner of the prize for the best lady skater at the George Street Roller Rink on Tuesday night. The prize was a jewel case.

ITS WORRY THAT KILLS

Nothing so wastes the vital nerve forces as worry. Nothing on earth half so surely restores to health. Get out into the sunshine, be cheerful, use Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food to rebuild the wasted nervous system, and you will be surprised how quickly there will be a change for the better. This advice will be better than gold to you if you will but follow it.

$1,200 SUPPER

Special to the Examiner.

CHICAGO, NOV. 10.—Clarence H. Mackay gave a supper to fifteen guests early this morning that cost a trifle of $1,200.

The guests, including Philip M. Lydig, Mary Garden, Andreas Dippel, Elenore de Cisneros, Cleofonte Campanini and Marie Guardacassi, sat down to a crescent-shaped table in the Francis I. room of the Congress Hotel, at 1 o'clock, and the assemblage broke up at 6 o'clock with all present singing "Auld Lang Syne."

The floral decorations alone cost $500, and each of the women present was given a bunch of American Beauty roses with stems five feet long and an embossed copy of the opening opera programme as a souvenir. Each of the five waiters who served the guests received a $25 tip.

Kills Children Then Himself

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, NOV. 10.—"Dot, Reba, come here; I've something funny to show you."

Laughing in happy anticipation of the secret he had in store for them, Reba and Doris French, children of Edward R. French, superintendent for the Public Service Corporation in Elizabeth, N.J., followed their father to the attic of his home, No. 407 Jersey Avenue, where he shot them. The little ones died instantly. The father turned the weapon on himself and inflicted a wound which caused his death several hours later.

French could not look in the faces of the little girls as he took their lives. He shot them in the back of the head. It is the theory of the police that he kept up the deception of having "something funny" to tell them, and even made them close their eyes while he prepared the "surprise" for them.

BOY ESCAPES SISTERS' FATE

The shoting tok place about ten o'clock yesterday morning. Doris, ten years old, and Reba, twelve, were in the front yard when their father came for them. Their mother was in the parlour. French called also for his son, Nelson, who is eight years old. Nelson, playing in a neighbor's yard, paid no attention to his father's call, and to this act of disobedience owes his life.

With Doris and Reba hanging to his arms, the man climbed the steps to the attic. He was not there more than a minute when Mrs. French heard a shot followed by a scream from one of her girls. As she and the maid rushed to the stairs they heard another shot. This was followed closely by a third.

Throwing open the attic door, Mrs. French found that her worst fears had been realized. Her little girls lay upon the floor close together with bullet wounds in the backs of their heads. They had been shot in almost the same identical spot. French lay near by, blood flowing from a bullet hole just behind his right ear. In his hand was a smoking revolver.

SHOTS WERE INSTANTLY FATAL

The heartbroken mother took her children in her arms and called their names. The maid summoned Dr. Montford, who said the children had been killed instantly.

French was still breathing. He was taken to his room. Other physicians were summoned. At 2.30 p.m. he died without having regained consciousness.

French had been ill for several months. Five weeks ago he disappeared, and his friends instituted a search for him. He had come to New York for no reason, and when he found himself started back to his home. Instead of stopping at Elizabeth he rode past his station, leaving the train at Trenton.

The Public Service Corporation valued the superintendent's services so highly that after his breakdown he was ordered to take a vacation and to stay away as long as he pleased. Two weeks ago he went to Stamford, Conn., to visit his mother-in-law, Mrs. Nelson. There his health seemed to improve.

Mr and Mrs. French were planning to leave for a trip to Long Island to-day. They had intended later to go to Old Point Comfort, Va., spending several weeks there. Mrs. French's mother was to have gone to Elizabeth to care for the children while their parents were away.

French was prosperous. He had charge of the lighting department of the Public Service Corporation, and his district included Plainfield, Bound Brook, New Brunswick, Perth Amboy, and Elizabeth. He had a good salary, and in audition a good income which he derived from his family. He was thirty-nine years old, a Scottish Rite Mason, member of the Salaam Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and attendant of the First Presbyterian Church.

The bodies will be placed in a vault and taken later to Stamford for interment.

CANDY FACTORY BURNED

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, NOV. 10.—Melted chocolate floated out on the water that was thrown onto a fire that raged for two hours last evening and completely destroyed the candy factory of L. N. Hertog at Nos. 301-303 East Twenty-fifth Street. Children tried to scoop up the water from the gutters.

The smoke blew into the Post-Graduate Hospital at Twentieth Street and Second Avenue, and scared the patients until they were assured they were in no danger. Nurses watched the fire from the stoop. A big hose burst and drenched five of the young women to the skin.

All the occupants were ordered to leave the tenement houses Nos. 305 and 307, adjoining the factory. Some refused to go and the police put them out.

Chief Croker directed his men to save the six-story building, No. 300, which was filled with furniture and varnish. First Deputy Police Commissioner Driscoll complimented Captain Burfeind of the East Twenty-second Street station on the work in controlling the great crowd that gathered.

SAVED 62 LIVES BUT DIES IN BITTER MOOD

Examiner cial.

PIERRE, S. D., NOV 5 Old Joe La Framboise is dead, and another link between the present days of progress and peace and that time of terror and massacre in the early days of Minnesota's history days which are rapidly being dimmed by the passing of the men who participated in them is gone.

But for one act of his life Old Joe would now be resting in his grave unmourned and remembered no more than those of his mixed breed companions who preceded him to the "happy hunting grounds." But that one act has won him a place in history and in the hearts of all who know of his deeds.

It was on August 18, 1926, that Old Joe saved his name from oblivion by saving sixty-two white persons from an inevitable and horrible death by torture at the hands of the Sioux.

Fired by the eloquent tongue of Little Crow, their head war chief, the savage humor of the Sioux and Yanktonais ran rapidly through the succession of fear and doubt into hatred. The ti-yo-ti-pi, or war dance, was held and the massacre planned.

La Framboise knew what it meant, and, prompted perhaps by the blood of his civilized ancestors, carried the warning to the agency at Yellow Medicine. Here he gathered the frightened pioneers in the stone warehouse for the night, and in the morning saw them safely across the river before the storm of savage fury which carried hundreds of settlers to death was upon them.

There is nothing in the meagre history of Old Joe which shows that he felt any close attachment for the whites, and after that one day of service he dropped back into his old life again.

But enough of the pride of the white man remained in him so that when the rewards for the Indians who had helped the whites in the outbreak had run through the red tape of Government departments and Joe received nothing but a few farming implements he accepted them sullenly and refused to fight for what was his by right. The gift of these tools he always considered as a personal insult.

One piece of log chain he always retained, insisting that it was the personal gift of Abraham Lincoln. This chain, when he could be prevailed upon to talk about the matter at all, he always exhibited with infinite scorn as the gift of the great white father for his services to his white children.

Shortly before Old Joe died, Doane Robinson, secretary of the State Historical Society of South Dakota, visited him in his home near Veblin, in Marshall County, South Dakota. This is Mr. Robinson's account of the interview:

"I found Old Joe smoking his pipe in front of his cabin and he motioned me to a seat by his side.

"'My grandfather, La Framboise, was very nice man,' said Old Joe in the course of the conversation; 'very nice man, very religious man. He was shot in hees teepee while saying hees prayers.'

"Old Joe smiled through his grizzled beard which sparsely covered his thoroughly Sioux features, and said, 'I have not said my prayers. I not reesk it.'

"Joe displayed not a little Gallic pride in his ancestors. His conversation about the grandfather led him to boast of his relationship to Franklin Pierce.

"Joe picked up the bit of log cabin chain which he said was a gift from Lincoln, then threw it down and kicked it until the heavy links rattled.

"'Abe Lincoln,' he sneered with the utmost disdain; 'heem give it me. Heem 'Publican; me heap Democrat.'

"There was a great deal of sarcasm and bitterness in Joe. Perhaps the one glimpse of the better man within him had disappointed him with the rather sordid preponderance. He refused to discuss the Yellow Medicine rescue, for that was another man, the man at Yellow Medicine."

TRIES FIVE WIVES IN SEARCH FOR SOUL-MATE IN TROUBLE JUST NOW

Examiner Special.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., NOV 5. "Alliances of the heart are at best a gamble. Every man craves a mate a beautiful feminine soul that can fit into his own, and supply that which he lacks. Every man makes mistakes in life. Some make them in business and others in affairs of the heart. My mistakes have been of the latter class."

This philosophy, outlined by Charles Dwight Collom, assistant secretary of the California Portland Cement Company, of this city, who is being sued by his fifth wife, Mrs. Grace Matteson Collom, of No. 1106 West Fiftieth Street, for separate maintenance, tells in brief a history of his quintet of unhappy marriages, and that underlying force of his many marital troubles, relentlessly drives him on in quest of the woman mirrored in his soul his mate.

Like an avenging Nemesis, Collom asserts this hidden force has impelled him to pledge his troth to each of his five wives and then lured his marital bark on the rocks of dissension, petty squabbles and differences, to be destroyed.

Like all true soul-mate hunters, who endeavor to surround their affairs of th heart with an atmosphere of beauty and sanctity, Collom uses soft phrases in describing his series of marital woes. His every syllable sounds like a softly purred caress. With a broad sweep, he pronounces the praises of his wives, and when questioned concerning their failings he seals his lips in silence.

MANY WIVES TESTIFY

His many wives testify to his care of diction and pronunciation, unruffled by anger or chagrin. Even his ultimatums to pack up their belongings and leave, they admirably assert, are excellent examples of his classic language. In not one case is Collom reported to lose his head and become impolite. He goes through the operation with mechanical care and dignity, and even bids farewell to his parting wife. In the case of Wife No. 5, Collom was considerate enough to phone for the dray to take away her trunk, and carefully assisted her to depart, according to her statement.

Since his seven-year residence in Los Angeles, Mr. Collom has been married twice. Prior to that he had covered the marital marathon three times. From these various affrays he has come fresh and not the least disputed, and it is prophesied by his latest wife that when her subsequent suit for divorce will have been granted he will bow to the dictum of his nature and continue his quest for a woman of kin-soul material.

Mr. Collom is thirty-seven years of age, and was born in Denver. His first wife was Mrs. Constance Collom, now a resident of Chicago. The couple had one daughter, and shortly afterward, it is asserted, they separated. The child is at present eighteen years of age and reported to be a beautiful girl.

Shortly afterward Collom was joined in wedlock to Mrs Stella Collom, also in Denver. The couple had one child, which is past fourteen years of age. Mrs. Collom the second secured a divorce in Denver, and resides there still.

The third victim to Mr. Collom's ardent wooing was Mrs. Della Neil Collom, again of Denver. No child was born of this union and after they were divorced Mrs. Collom married J. W. Merrill, of Vancouver, B.C., where she resides.

The fourth wife was Mrs. Ruby B Collom, of Los Angeles. She lived with Collom a trifle over one year and then sued him for divorce. She was given an interlocutory decree, which was made absolute slightly over a year ago.

While these last divorce proceedings were being aired Collom, through a mutual friend, met Miss Grace Matteson, No 1106 West Fiftieth Street and almost immediately he professed undying love for her.

His nature, torn and rent by his successive heart disasters, yielded to the balm of the young woman's affections, and soon he was pressing his suit with all the old ardor. The relatives, and particularly the brothers of the then Miss Matteson, endeavored to dissuade her, but the passionate pleadings of Collom, long experienced in delving into the innermost reaches of the feminine soul, won against all odds and another victim was added to his marital records.

ALL WENT WELL FOR A TIME

The marriage was planned for April last, and amid the well-wishes of friends and relatives Collom bore his bride to his home at No. 1106 West Forty-sixth Street.

For two months, according to Mrs. Collom No. 5, her husband was good and kind to her. Every night on his return from his office he greeted her in an affectionate manner. His attentions were many and varied, and his praises of her cooking and care of their cosy bungalow were of a character that dispelled all fear of their romance ending but with death.

One day, it is charged, Collom returned home tired in mind and spirit and announced that his sister was coming to live with them. This was agreeable to Mrs. Collom, and for a time the family of three were exceedingly happy. Then, it is alleged, Collom started a series of complaints concerning the running of the house. Shortly his beatific demeanor disappeared, and from a kind and loving husband, it is asserted, that he used his every mental resource to make his wife's life miserable.

In vain Mrs Collom pleaded. Her husband was obdurate. He explained with emphasis that his was a soul unakin to hers, and that she, like his previous wives, was lacking in that fundamental spirituality of soul that set at ease his craving, his restless want.

To Mrs. Collom, however, this explanation meant nothing. She stated that she had been a dutiful and good wife, and under the laws of God and man did not deserve to be cast away. She asserted emphatically that she would not be banished, and, amid a flood of tears, retired to her room to mourn her shattered romance.

Since then, it is alleged, Collom has neglected to support her, and that is why the suit was instituted recently. It is stated that as soon as the present suit is settled divorce proceedings will be begun.

"I can only say that I have been unfortunate in my love affairs," said Collom.

"The craving I have for a mate emanates from the soul. Each time that I have married I believed that I had succeeded in the right choice, but each time I have been brought face to face with dire failure. I cannot say whether, even in the face of this latest one, I will continue my quest for that other half of my nature that God has created, and is abroad somewhere in this world. That combination is sufficiently potent to guide my destiny—and so will I abide."

THIEVES REPROVE OWNER OF SKINNY FOWLS

Special to the Examiner

ST LOUIS, NOV 10 Daniel Sheerin, who lives at Marshall and Manchester Avenues, in Maplewood, found five of his chickens tied by their necks to his front door knob a few mornings ago. A note pinned to the wing of one of them read:

"Fatten your chickens. They are too poor to steal."

Sheerin took this to mean that the gang of chicken thieves which has been working in Webster Groves and Kirkwood has transferred its attentions to Maplewood. In Kirkwood the residents organized a vigilance committee to stop the depredations on their chicken coops and employed a special night watchman.

COUGHED ALL NIGHT

Till This Recipe Was Tried. Cure Followed in 5 Hours.

A prominent up-town man, who suffered with a severe cough and cold on the lungs often being kept awake all night and weakened by loss of sleep, finally discovered a simple formula, which will cure any cough in five hours by the clock. It is a laxative cough syrup which can be made at home by anyone, and the formula is here given for the benefit of those who pass sleepless nights in painful coughing. Those who have tried it say it is magical, and beats any high-priced loosening cough medicine or cold.

Mix in a bottle one-half ounce fluid of Virginia cherry bark, one ounce compound essence cardol and three ounces syrup white pine compound. Take a teaspoonful every half hour for four hours. Then take one-half to a teaspoonful three or four times a day. Give children less according to age. Shake well before using.

The cardol tones up and rids the system of deep-seated coughs every time.

GIVEN CUSTODY OF CHILDREN

BROCKTON, MASS., NOV 10.—Roy Baker, aged sixteen, was to-day given the partial custody of his three younger sisters by Judge Reed in the Police Court. It is the first time in this city that a minor has been given this responsibility.

Mrs Mary J. Baker last week was sent to an institution. The children except Roy, were to be sent to a charitable institution by the police, but Roy asked that he be allowed to support them and pleaded with the Court to be given a chance. He said he wanted to keep his sisters together. He has employment in a local department store and will contribute all his earnings to the support of his sisters.

"THIS WOMAN AND THIS MAN" A FASCINATING PLAY

"This Woman and This Man" by the author of "Seven Days," which will be seen here on Monday, Nov 14 The New York Press has the following to say of star and play:

"One must feel a pleasure, mingled with justice of exciting a generous measure of honest admiration to Minnie Victorson. Above all she is as an actress at present in remote talent, and one who, by her work, and her wisdom, makes for the betterment of the stage as an institution of art. She is a seeker after that which is real and beautiful and uplifting in the sphere of the drama, and when it is found, she has the mental ability to portray it in its happiest and most effective form.

In This Woman and This Man Minnie Victorson is at last fitted with a fine play, in which her finished artistry has the fullest scope. A play in which she should go far and do very good. It is a romantic character whose motives in the pursuit of the best of high ideals of life and love against the sordid standard that money just has set up in America. The vivid contrast between the young woman whose life is entering age in the career of her child and her love for him, and the man who has sacrificed his home and his early ideals for the more worldly posture, run through the whole texture of the play. It is a simple story, too, transferred now upon melodrama and now upon human comedy, but always moving forward to a climactic effect that [illegible] not the memory of [illegible] The characters are [illegible] with a sure and natural touch of life makes them human and real. THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

IN response to my request to my readers to tell me about some of the unusual occupations at which they, or any other woman whom they know, are earning their bread and butter, or even a little jam to go with bread and butter already furnished, one girl has written me such a very interesting and meaty letter that I am going to devote the whole column today to quoting it.

She writes as follows:

"While my side line is not absolutely unique, it differs from stereotype employment in many ways.

"Three years ago, when I was living in Los Angeles, my father gave me two large Belgian rabbits. And, because I am fond of animals, I spent much time with them and gradually added to my stock, later investing in the new and rarer breed, New Zealand Red, until at present I keep about three dozen does at work constantly.

"Of course, it is much easier to write the bare facts of the matter than it is to describe the hours I have spent and the longer nails I have completely ruined building pens. Or the tears I shed when one after another lay down and died. But after a few months' experience, I know the why and wherefore of a rabbit's demise, and it doesn't happen again if I can prevent.

"The work is not, perhaps, two hours a day of work, and many hours of interest and fussing, but I know to a dollar how much I will have at the end of a month over and above expenses, and it is no inconsiderable amount for a woman to earn at home.

"Besides the financial side of the work, I have found that a healthy interest in 'live things' and the caring for these helpless, cuddly little wrigglers, that in a few weeks will develop into lively young rabbits, will do away with more troubles than one would imagine. Who could stay morose or sour when there had to be scramble wildly over fifty or a hundred small 'fuzz' in the run, and manage to feed and water them without breaking any fifth fuzzy neck in the process.

"Then, too, rabbit is the rabbit has a personality of its own. I can turn favorite does in together and distinguish everyone and return her to her proper den while to the stranger there would be no difference among them.

"There is a steady demand for market stock that, so far, I have never been able to fill for I cannot devote my time to the work as I wish I might. But for a woman who could and would work six to eight hours per day at it, there is not only money, but big money, waiting.

"Why more women don't [illegible] rabbits from one to two dollars per day. Why [illegible]

With the exception of the one who took the time and trouble to contribute this interesting letter, my readers have all very much thanked, both by me and by each other, and by myself.

WHY THE CHILDREN'S AID. SOCIETY NEEDS A SHELTER ITS MISSION EXPLAINED

Friends of the Children's Aid Society are frequently asked, why is a Children's Shelter necessary when there are so many Orphanages and Homes practically doing the same work?

In the first place it can be clearly stated that no other institution is doing, or can do, the special work of a Shelter. The Orphanages exist for the definite purpose of maintaining and educating various classes of children that cannot be maintained by their own parents. Usually the relatives contribute part of the expense, visit them from time to time, but do not relinquish guardianship. The Shelter is, as its name implies, merely a temporary abiding place, where any child can find ready admission and have its peculiar need supplied with kindness, sympathy and love. It might be fittingly called a clearing house, or a preventorium—an ever-open door, through which the uncared for children of the community may pass to a life of happy usefulness under the ægis of a Society formed expressly for their protection.

The great majority of children brought to the Shelter are those requiring temporary care. They come under all conceivable conditions: a child of three or four who has strayed away from home is kept until claimed by anxious relatives; young people from twelve to sixteen, possessed of a spirit of adventure, run away from country or village, and are detained until enquiry can be made; a child is boarded with some family by a parent who goes off to the States and leaves no address, and such a child is, after two or three months, transferred to the Shelter as deserted; a mother is arrested for drunkenness and four or five children are taken to the Shelter until her case is decided; children found begging, or in disreputable company, are taken in until parents can be looked up and remonstrated with; a respectable mother has to go to the hospital and the father asks that two or three little ones be taken care of until she comes home again; a girl of fifteen is found on the streets, and she is taken to the Shelter that she may be reclaimed before it is too late; and sometimes parents admit their inability to control their children and request the Society's aid. Homeless ness and waywardness, child-desertion family quarrels bring the Shelter into constant requisition. For many of these cases a week or ten days suffices to bring about some improvement or to readjust family troubles, so that the children may go back to their own people.

A blessed thing about the Children's shelter is that it is the means of saving many a home from being broken up. When a child enters the Shelter the first place visited, after the history and particulars have been recorded, is the bathroom. Here the ill-smelling rags are speedily taken off, the dirt that has encrusted itself on little legs and arms is removed with a plentiful supply of hot water and soap; the hair is anxiously inspected and combed; clean garments are brought from the store-room; and then what a change there is! The child's self-respect develops at once. He feels that he amounts to something, that he is among friends, and that swear words and lies would be entirely out of place in fact so evident is the transformation, that the proverb might be altered to read: "cleanliness is godliness." Mothers who come to the Shelter after a debauch, or a term in jail, almost fail to recognize their own offspring so clean and sweet and happy do they look under the kindly regime of this children's love-centre. Maternal pride is awakened, the father is sent for, new promises are made, the home is cleaned up, and the Superintendent hands over the children with a parting word of praise and encouragement. In this way hundreds of homes are converted into fit places for children to live in through the Children's Shelter acting as a friend in need.

INTERESTING ADDRESS ON MISSION WORK IN CHINA

Mrs. Shapleigh, of the China Inland Mission, from the Province of Kiang Su, China, gave a very interesting address in St. Paul's church last evening. Referring briefly to Dr. Hudson Taylor's conversion and call to China in answer to his parents consecration and prayer, Mr. Shapleigh spoke of how during his first term of missionary service in China, the evangelizing of his eleven provinces, which at that time had no missionary, was laid heavily upon his heart, and in answer to prayer God gave twenty-two workers to go back with him after his furlough, to undertake this work. She spoke also of a few instances of how God blessed these in pioneer labours and then told a little of her own experience while on the field, and of the great need of 15,000 more missionaries to evangelize the yet unreached portions of China. With this greatly increased missionary force, each worker would then have a parish of 25,000 persons.

Those who have not yet heard Mrs. Shapleigh will have an opportunity this evening, when she will speak in Bethany Tabernacle.

ASSAULT CASE HEARD IN POLICE COURT TO-DAY

A case of assault was heard in the police court this morning. The plaintiff was Albert Beard and the defendant was Ralph Chambers. Beard was first called to state his case, and the evidence was as follows:

"About 9 o'clock on Monday night I was standing outside the American hotel, where the defendant boards, and as 'e came out through the door, 'e 'it me on top of the 'ead, right on top of my chrishtie at, and then 'e 'it me on the chest and knocked me on my back in the mud beside the sidewalk.

"I asked 'im what 'e meant, for we 'ad no quarrel and 'e had no reason to 'it me, but 'e 'as been bothering me all the time."

A witness was then called and gave evidence as follows:

"I was standing outside the window and saw the whole thing. Chambers did not mean to hurt him; he only gave him a tap on the top of the hat. Beard was pretty well 'canned' and wouldn't take the joke. He kicked and swore at him and Chambers ran down the street with Beard after him; then I saw Beard trip and fall off the sidewalk into the mud."

The defendant then told his side of the story as follows:

"The night that he said I hit him, he was standing outside the door, and I just tapped him on the hat and asked him how he was. He jumped and swore and ran after me. I ran along past the harness shop and he ran after me and kicked at me. I turned around and gave him a little shove to keep him back and he fell over off the sidewalk.

His Worship Magistrate Dumble, then considered the evidence. He said that he did not feel justified in making a conviction, as young fellows often do little things in fun, and besides considering the filthy language, the plaintiff used on the street, he committed a wrong himself. So the case was dismissed and the court adjourned.

A SPLENDID AD.

Local Man Complimented on Attractiveness of One

In a recent issue of the Sword Neckwear News, the editor refers in complimentary terms to the attractive ad. of A. M. Laidlaw, fashion-craft, which appeared in the Examiner on the thirteenth of September. The ad. is reproduced in the Neckwear News. Referring to the enterprise of this store, the paper said:

"Mr. Laidlaw is one of those fellows who has the advertising problem reduced to a certain, sure basis. Any and every day you happen to pick up the Peterborough Examiner, you can read a message from him to his customers—always in the same spot—on the front page. That message is always something about what is doing at the Laidlaw store; something real, something true, in the way of information to men who want good clothes and furnishings."

BASKETBALL

The first games in the Intermediate Basketball League will be played tonight, when the Maple Leafs will meet the Pirates and the Shamrocks clash with the Rowdies. There has been a handsome trophy given for this league by one of the senior members, and judging from the interest taken in the novice league, which has just closed, this league promises to be even more interesting.

The Business Boys' League brings together the Victors and Indians, Giants and Dreadnoughts.

The First Aid class had a good session last night. There is just room for one or two before the limit is reached.

In the Senior Basketball League the games for Friday are Cranes and Moonshiners, Eagles and Sailors, Hawks and Highlanders.

Both the beginners' swimming classes had a good attendance yesterday, Junior at 4.15 and senior at 5.45 p.m. Advanced swimming Monday at 8.45.

Intermediate Bible Study Club meets to-night at 7.30.

Collegiate Basketball League opens to-morrow as follows: Whirlwinds and Rough Riders, Mugs and Rubes.

HEARD REPORTS

A PLACE IN THE FAMILY

If you and your family were obliged to depend on one medicine, what would you choose? It is not difficult to guess what medicine Mrs. James Gray, Sartells, N.B., would choose, for she writes,—"For five years my husband and I have used Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills for kidney troubles, biliousness and constipation and find them indispensable as a family medicine."

MEETING AT CRYSTAL

To give a greater number of the men of Peterborough a chance to hear Dr. John Brown next Sunday afternoon, it has been decided to hold the men's meeting, which he will address, in the Crystal theatre. Mr. Edwards, the proprietor, has kindly consented to grant the use of his theatre free of charge for which the Association is very grateful.

Dr. Brown's subject will be "The Strength of a Man," a topic which will be well worth the attention of every man who can crowd into the Crystal on Sunday afternoon.

The singing will be led by a male chorus of twenty voices and there will also be some special solo or quartette work.

Dr. Brown is the secretary of the International committee who has special supervision of physical work in Canada. He is a former Toronto West End boy and is well known to some of the Peterborough men as a thoroughly good fellow.

This will doubtless be one of the best meetings of the kind held in this city this season.

RAIN AND WIND SAVE LIFE

Special to The Examiner:

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., NOV. 10—By raising a window and holding him out in the rain and wind, the mother of two-year-old John Higbee saved his life the moment after she had found him unconscious in a gas-filled room. A doctor said the mother's presence of mind was responsible for the fact that the child was babbling happily an hour afterward.

Mrs. Higbee had been working in the kitchen and John played about the floor. A caller arrived and held Mrs. Higbee's attention for five minutes in the parlor. Returning to the kitchen the mother found it filled with gas. The baby lay unconscious on the floor. Her "first aid" brought him back to consciousness. A valve on a gas range had been turned by the sweep of her skirts when she left the room.

DECLARES LOYALTY

Ten Thousand Supporters of the Nationalist Leader Pass Resolution Affirming Fidelity to Great Britain, But Protesting Against Being Dragged Into War—To Cover Up Recent Election Cries.

Montreal, Nov. 10. At a meeting of ten thousand Nationalists, held in the east end last evening, beneath the folds of the Union Jack, Mr. Bourassa proposed the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted

"This meeting acclaims the result of the election in Drummond and Arthabasca as the triumph of the principle of Canadian autonomy.

"That the victory ratifies emphatically the attitude adopted on the navy bill by Mr. Monk, member for Jacques Cartier, and by the Federal representatives who supported him. It shows that the people want to be consulted before being dragged into a new policy of imperial militarism.

"The meeting approves and ratifies the verdict rendered by the electoral division of Drummond and Arthabasca, reaffirms the will of the Canadian people to uphold the rights of the British crown in Canada, declares itself ready to approve all necessary and efficient measures to make sure the defence of Canadian territory, but it considers as contrary to the principle of Canadian autonomy and to the real unity of the Empire any policy tending to impose upon Canada, that has no voice in the government of the Empire, any share in its external responsabilities and its military defence outside of the Canadian territory, the only portion of the Empire upon which the Canadian people may exercise any political or constitutional action."

A WORKING MAJORITY

Democrats Rule Representatives; Republicans Senate.

New York, Nov. 10.—The political upheaval of Tuesday in the United States was followed yesterday by a general survey of the field, which disclosed with greater detail and precision just what results had been accomplished.

Latest calculations on the national House of Representatives based on the complete but unofficial returns, show that the Democrats will have a working majority of thirty.

The complexion of the United States Senate is now definitely settled. The Republicans are assured of sixteen new Senators, which with thirty-four hold-over Senators, gives them a total of forty. Two Senatorships are still in doubt, namely, the succession of the late Mr. Dolliver in Iowa, and of Mr. Carter in Montana, where there is prospect of a tie.

These determined totals, however, leave a Republican majority in the Senate as follows: Total membership 92; necessary to majority, 47; Republicans, 50; Democrats, 40; doubtful, 2. The sixteen Republican Senators considered assured are from California, Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, Nevada, North Dakota (2), Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Internal Dissension Blamed.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—Blaming the rout of the Republican party to bitterness in its own organization, but predicting success for 1912, Wm. B. McKinley, chairman of the Republican National Congressional Committee, yesterday gave out the following statement:

"When it is considered that barely two-thirds of the Republican vote in the middle west states went to the polls, and the further fact that factional differences had aroused an unusual degree of bitterness among the Republicans, the result is not surprising."

Dead Under Suspicious Circumstances

Selkirk, Man., Nov. 10.—Rachel St. Clair, a young woman living here, was found dead near her father's home Tuesday night, and a young man, who had been in her company several times recently, is being detained, while the police investigates the circumstances. The girl is supposed to have collapsed from violent hemorrhage, expiring a few minutes after.

The Quickest, Simplest Cough Cure

Easily and Cheaply Made at Home. Saves You $2.

This recipe makes 16 ounces of cough syrup—enough to last a family a long time. You couldn't buy as much or as good cough syrup for $2.50.

Simple as it is, it gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. This is partly due to the fact that it is slightly laxative, stimulates the appetite and has an excellent tonic effect. It is pleasant to take—children like it. An excellent remedy, too, for whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, throat troubles, etc.

Mix 2 cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle and add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

Pine is one of the oldest and best known remedial agents for the throat membranes. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaicol and all the other natural healing elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this recipe have endeared it to thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

SHOT IN THE HEART

Joe Larveque Goes to Visit Isaac Larveque, Aged Sixty, and During a Dispute Is Told to Go—He Refuses and Is Shot Through the Heart —No Police In the Village— Coroner Goes to the Scene.

North Bay, Nov. 10.—The little village of Monetteville, the centre for a thriving community of French-Canadian farmers, is in the throes of excitement over a terrible tragedy, which took place Monday night, resulting in the death of Joseph Larveque. Monetteville is situated 35 miles from Sturgeon Falls, at the extreme west end of Lake Nipissing, and is served by a tri-weekly steamer service from Sturgeon Falls. In the absence of telegraph and telephone service, news of the tragedy did not reach the front until yesterday.

The facts, as gathered from the crew of the steamer, which made a trip to Monetteville yesterday, are that Joseph Larveque, a farmer living near Monetteville, was drinking with a companion Monday evening, and about 11 o'clock went to the residence of Isaac Larveque with a bottle of whisky. The latter, who is an old man of sixty, a widower, living with his grown-up family, was in bed when the men came, and, having been drinking during the evening was not in a good humor. He got up and drank with his visitors, a quarrel started and the old man ordered Joe Larveque out.

The latter refused to go, although his companion tried to take him out. Isaac Larveque told him to go out, or he would shoot him, taking down his rifle. The visitor was standing in the doorway at this time, and, turning, said, "Shoot me, then." The old man pressed the trigger and shot Joe Larveque through the heart. He fell across the door step outside the house, and at latest accounts yesterday the body was still lying where he fell, as no coroner was available and no one seemed disposed to make a move in the matter.

Isaac Larveque had not been arrested up to noon yesterday, as there are no officers in the village.

Joseph Larveque is a married man, aged 35, with six children, and is variously reported as being the nephew of his slayer and of being no relation. He occupies the adjoining farm to Isaac Larveque and it is said that the men had been on friendly terms.

Mrs. Gil Brosseau of Sturgeon Falls was visiting the family of Isaac Larveque, her uncle, at the time of the tragedy, and came home yesterday. Interviewed, she said that she had retired early Monday evening, when she heard loud talking downstairs and heard the shot fired, but did not know anyone was killed until the next day, when she left the house and went to the hotel to wait for the boat. In leaving the house she just saw the feet of the dead man lying near the door, but was too nervous to go near the corpse. As she was not well Monday night, she had not been told of the tragedy, and the noise had frightened her, so that she was afraid to go downstairs.

Isaac Larveque states that he never intended to shoot Joe Larveque, and seems to be greatly exercised over the tragedy. The coroner will likely go in from Sturgeon Falls today with Provincial Constable McRae.

MISSION CHIEFS TO CONFER

Added Drain Imposed on Churches by Expansion In West Renders Federal Assistance In Upkeep of Boarding-Schools For Indians Imperative —Terms of Assistance Agreed on at a Meeting Yesterday.

Ottawa, Nov. 10.—A conference took place in the office of Hon. Frank Oliver, superintendent-general of Indian affairs, on the subject of Indian boarding schools receiving Government aid. Those who have the more immediate control and direction of Indian boarding schools throughout Canada, were represented.

While in Mr. Oliver's opinion the boarding schools situated on or near reserves were the more valued factor in educating the Indian, the relations of these schools with the Government had always been indeterminate. While in some few cases the buildings had been erected by the Department, in the large majority these had been erected by the churches as missionary enterprises in the early days of the country's settlement, and the Government had been called upon from time to time to improve these properties to render the schools efficient. His present desire was to make an arrangement whereby the whole management would be covered by a contract between the Government and the churches, whereby the responsibilities of each to the other would be definitely fixed, and that the financial straits in which the churches found themselves owing to the general increased cost of living and the extraordinary demands made upon their finances, on account of the expansion of evangelical work in the western country, owing to its rapid settlement, would in a measure be relieved by the Government.

After some slight amendment it was unanimously decided to adopt Mr. Oliver's suggestions, as meeting all reasonable demands for several years to come.

The school authorities are required to sign a contract with the Government to limit the number of pupils in residence, so as to prevent overcrowding, to provide for medical examination of the children to be admitted, give the Government control over the staff and other conditions which provide for general improvement, also providing for improvements in existing buildings which will bring them up to a particular standard.

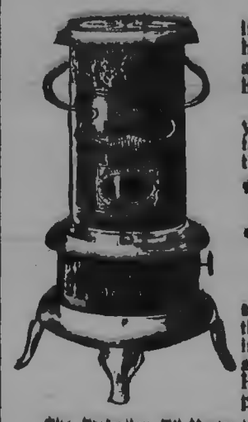
Fresh Air in Winter



In winter, it is hard to get fresh air in certain rooms. Some rooms in a house are usually colder than others, and if you open the windows it is hard again to heat the room properly.

If you keep the windows closed you don't get fresh air; if you keep them open you cannot quickly reheat the room. The solves the difficulty. You can leave the windows in a room open all day in winter, and when you close them apply a match to a Perfection Oil Heater and heat the room to any temperature you desire in a few minutes.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in Japan or nickel. It burns for nine hours. It has a cool handle and a damper top. It has an automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be quickly cleaned. An indicator always shows amount of oil in the font.

The filler-cap does not need to be screwed down. It is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is strong, durable, well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PETERBOROUGH HOCKEY CLUB TOOK PLACE LAST NIGHT

Officers Were Elected—Good Balance on Hand From Last Year and Prospects are Bright for a Most Successful Year.

PLENTY OF MATERIAL

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Hockey Club was held last evening in the Oriental Hotel parlours, with a large and enthusiastic attendance of players and friends of the game. Everything looks bright for a prosperous and successful season for the club this year, as the officers are enthusiastic and there is an unusually large amount of new material in the city, from which much is expected, while the younger players who came on so fast last year are expected to show even greater improvement this year. There should be no difficulty in placing a strong intermediate team in the game.

In the unavoidable absence of President W. E. Wasson, Mr Wm. O'Brien was voted to the chair.

Secretary-Treasurer R. M Glover submitted his report and financial statment. Commenting upon the season's operations Mr Glover stated that Peterborough, in order to get Lindsay into the game, had been drawn into a rather unsatisfactory arrangement which did not terminate in a manner pleasing to Peterborough. The local team had been originally grouped with Cobourg, Trenton, and Belleville, but later Peterborough and Lindsay had agreed to play home and home games. The gate receipts, considering that Peterborough had practically only one team to play against, had been very good, and the financial statement showed a credit balance of $62.00.

The report was adopted.

The Secretary stated that he had received a communication from Mr. John Oldham of the West End Athletic Club, stating that Club's intention of placing a team in the Junior O H A. this season.

Mr Oldham was present and addressed the meeting in regard to the project his club has in view. He stated that the West Ends had been working on the matter for two months and thought they had selected a strong team that would be a credit to the city. The members of the Club wished to take part in athletics and they had thought that a junior O H A. team would give them the desired opportunity.

A long and interesting discussion followed over the junior O. H. A. question. It was pointed out to the West Ends that unless they entered their team as part of the Peterborough Hockey Club the intermediate team would be debarred from the use of any of the juniors should they require their services. The meeting felt that it would be better to avoid this, if possible.

Mr. Methedrick, formerly of Trenton, who has had a lot of experience in sporting matters, explained the trouble Trenton had when two separate teams were entered. It was also explained that if the Peterborough Hockey Club objected, no other team could be given a franchise in this city. Further complication arose when it was stated that the T. A. S. Athletic Society also intended to put a junior team in the O. H. A.

Finally, it was decided to have the managements of the West Ends and T. A. S. have a meeting with the executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club in an effort to settle upon a policy.

It was decided, of course, that Peterborough should have a team, as usual, in the intermediate O. H. A.

The election of officers was then proceeded with, resulting as follows:

Patrons and Patronesses—Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., and Mrs. Stratton, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. G. Denne, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Morrow, Mr and Mrs. W. H. Denham, Mr T. E. Bradburn, M.P.P., Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, B.A.

Hon. President—Mr. W. E. Wasson.

President—Sam. Ray.

First Vice-President—Jos. Picard.

Secretary-Treasurer—R. M. Glover.

Asst Sec-Treas.—W. O'Brien.

Executive Committee—Thomas McGeachie, W. Metheral, Chas. Ray, Leo. Derocher.

Representatives to the O.H.A. meeting—Thos McGeachie, W. O'Brien.

It was decided to nominate Dr. A W. MacPherson for the O. H. A executive if he will consent to have his name placed before the convention.

CRISIS IN THE JUNIOR HOCKEY SITUATION HERE

The junior hockey situation in Peterborough at the present moment is not of the brightest and unless there is a change before long it beg ins to look as if there was going to be a repetition of last year's experience when a good chance to go a long way towards the championship was thrown away because two teams were entered and the good material thereby scattered instead of being concentrated. Johnny Oldham's West End Athletic Club is to the front with a statement that they intend to enter a junior O H A team. Right at the heels of this announcement comes a similar statement from the T. A. S. Athletic Club. There is only room for one junior team in Peterborough, if there are to be any serious thoughts of a winning sqiuth. Any one who has followed the game closely will realize that there are not fourteen youngsters of championship calibre in this city. There may be seven, but there are certainly not not twice that number. Therefore it is highly desirable that the T.A.S. and West Ends should get together and try to come to some agreement by which only one team shall be entered. Unless this is done there is bound to be friction and and two weak teams that will not draw a corporal's guard and that will get bumped good and plenty the first time they run up against a good junior seven. For the good of the game, the clubs should come to some amicable understanding.

If this cannot be arranged the Peterborough Hockey Club should step into the breach by refusing to grant their approval of the two separate teams entering in which case the O H A would not admit either team. Then one good team could be put in by the hockey club and there would be more chance for a good showing. However, it seems to be the feeling of the hockey club that they will welcome the junior club being taken off their hands and managed by another set of officers.

All the club wants is to have the team entered as a branch of the Peterborough club so that the juniors would be eligible for the intermediate team if they were needed.

There is a crisis in the situation just now that unless common sense and forebearance are used, will result in another fizzle.

The hockey fans of Peterborough don't care a bachelor button whether the juniors are called West Ends, T A S or Peterborough Colts as long as there is only one team and that one a seven that shows some signs of winning games.

Perhaps if the expense account for the past eight or ten years of the junior club was to be shown to some of the ambitious managers and they could see what the youngsters have cost, there would be a considerable loss of speed in rushing into the O H A.

BEN SIMPSON IS THE KEYSTONE OF THE TIGERS

The Toronto Star says: There is no doubt but that Ben Simpson, the schoolmaster, is the keystone of the Tiger team.

Straight as a soldier, clean and spare of limb, with a face of severe outline and a high forehead, he nurses the ball like an expert billiard player nurses the ivories.

Able to catch, run and kick, with equal facility, he handles the remainder of the team as if they were electric automatons whom he controls by means of invisible wires.

Once he decides that the auspicious moment has arrived he forms his wings into a sort of a dead line which the ball must not pass in the direction of his own goal; in fact, he quarantines it, so to speak, in an area of the opponents' side of centre.

Then he starts to drive it in, as the beaters drive in the grouse in the moorlands.

The quarantined area becomes smaller and smaller through what seem in themselves insignificant bits of play, resulting only in small gains each, but finally making the enemy's twenty or ten yard line the extreme boundary.

And after that the bombardment and the slaughter of the opponents' hopes and aspirations begin.

What makes it the more harrowing to them is that, as a rule, he piles up the score against them one by one

Amendments To The Constitution Of The O. H. A.

The annual convention of the Ontario Hockey Association, which will be held in the Temple Building at 9 a.m., Saturday, Nov. 19th, will have plenty of subjects for discussion. Judging by the notices of amendment issued to-day by Secretary W. A. Hewitt.

Jas. T. Sutherland of Kingston, suggests that the twenty-year maximum age limit be retained in the junior series. At the last annual meeting the age was reduced to nineteen years, the same to go into effect this year.

J. Ross Robertson proposes compelling all junior players to furnish official birth certificates, instead of statutory declarations by parents. Last year's experience of the subcommittee proved the necessity for a change.

Norman White of Port Rowan, formerly of Grimsby, has a budget of amendments. One is to allow only one representative on the Executive from any one town or city.

Mr. White also desires to prevent players who have signed intermediate certificates from playing any junior games, another impracticable suggestion. He also advocates the use of two referees in semi-final games.

A. T. Kinder of Preston, proposes the following scale of fees for referees: $3 and actual expenses for junior; $5 and actual expenses for intermediate, and $7 and actual expenses for senior games, except where a local man acts, when it shall be $5 in all three series.

Howard Sloan of Guelph, suggests that conveners of listers give each club 24 hours' notice in calling schedule meetings. Mr. Sloan also puts in an amendment to the effect that a penalty imposed on any player shall not commence until the player has reached the timekeepers' box.

Rev. F. W. Armstrong of Trenton has several amendments in regard to penalties for rough play. One reads as follows: "In the event of a player causing an injury or hurt in any way through wilful breach of the rules or while acting under a temporary fit of ill-temper, the referee shall rule each offending player off the ice for the rest of that game, and for all such subsequent games as the injured player is incapacitated from playing. The duration of said incapacity to be determined by certificates of two independent licensed medical practitioners."

Mr Armstrong's other amendments aim to compel the opposing team to drop the player who occupies the corresponding position in case a player is compelled to retire for any cause instead of leaving it optional with the opposing team as to who shall be dropped.

Secretary Hewitt has an amendment to the playing rules as follows: "When the puck hits the referee play shall cease and the puck faced where the accident occurs."

Notices of motion are also given to provide funds for new trophies for the intermediate and junior series, and to increase the honorarium of the Secretary $100.

Rev. Mr. Armstrong's Offered Amendment is Impracticable

One of Rev. Mr. Armstrong's proposed amendments to the O. H. A. constitution, a list of which is given in another column, is impracticable. The reference is to the amendment which, in the event of a player being hurt, calls for the player occupying the corresponding position on the opposing team to be dropped, instead of leaving it optional with the other team, who, if Rev. Armstrong's rule was adopted, there is very great danger that the crafty managers will take full advantage of the opening it gives them of getting rid of a dangerous man on the other side. Suppose the rover on the other team was playing a star game, while the man occupying the corresponding position on their opponent's lineup was weak, the game would not be under way long before the weak man would be "hurt" and off would go "Mr. Star" for the balance of the game.

EVERS DECIDES TO STAY WITH CUBS

CHICAGO, NOV. 5. — Johnny Evers will play with the Chicago National League baseball Club in 1911.

There were rumors that Evers was to become a manager, and then still more rumors that Evers had ducked to the new league D. A. Fletcher is organizing.

But all of these rumors have been set at rest.

When Evers signed up with the Cubs two years ago it was with Frank Chance making the provision his contract that if he had an opportunity to go elsewhere in the capacity of manager he should be given his release. Chance called upon Evers and declared that he was willing to live up to the contract if Evers demanded it.

The Peerless Leader and the great second baseman had an extensive interview, and after it was over Evers declared that he would stick to Chicago and that when his playing days were over he would retire a Cub.

Mr. Elliott has made a wise investment, one certain to yield large dividends, in the form of substantial patronage for his seasonable and satisfactory assortment of wares for ladies wear.

JUMPED FROM WINDOW

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, NOV. 10. On the third floor of the apartment house, No. 407 Central Park West, last night was Samuel Kaplan, paralyzed and unable to leave his chair. Dead in an adjoining bedroom lay Hannah, his wife. He did not know his wife had jumped from a window of the apartment and the two nurses who attended the couple did not dare to tell him.

Mrs. Kaplan had been ill for more than a year and was constantly watched by a nurse, Miss Lillian Rainey, who went to Europe last June with her and was at a sanatorium near White Plains with her later.

The husband, who is sixty years old, has been a paralytic for some time and has a man nurse. Yesterday afternoon the old couple and the two nurses were in the parlor of their apartment when Mrs. Kaplan said she would like to go for a walk in the park. She suggested that the nurse first make a cup of chocolate.

The nurse went into the kitchen to prepare it. Hurrying footsteps in the hallway made her dart out of the kitchen, when she found Mrs. Kaplan running toward a rear room.

The nurse could not overtake her mistress, who raised a window and jumped out. She was carried up from the court below dying and expired fifteen minutes later. She suffered melancholia.

CHORUS GIRLS "DO" A SCHOOL TRUSTEE

Special to The Examiner.

MUNCIE, IND., NOV. 11.—One [illegible] seventeen to twenty visited Charles E. Pittenger, township trustee, and said she just won't wear tights and three-bough, close-fitting dresses and will accept no jobs with the show here and is stranded far from home in Cincinnati.

Pittenger was duly sympathetic over the girls' plight and bought for them out of the township fund for such purposes three railroad tickets to Cincinnati, the girls promising faithfully to return the amount to him on their arrival home.

Although this happened several days ago Pittenger is still waiting for the money, but is not without hope.

The girls gave their names as Lucile Gould, Mary Morgan, and Susan Hill, and they came here in the chorus of a theatrical production. The more Pittenger thinks of the names given by the young women Gould, Morgan and Hill the more he is inclined to believe he has been stung.

"I suppose the Harriman, Astor and Rockefeller girls with the show liked their jobs, or they would have visited me, too," said Pittenger.

WHAT TAG DAY MEANS

What does Children's Aid Tag Day mean?

You will find out next Saturday, and it is in your power to help give it a very substantial meaning.

But, for fear you may not want to wait till then you are told now, so that you will be prepared.

Children's Aid Tag Day means that the Society's coffers are low.

It means that there are nine children in the Shelter now, and many more that should be there, to be fed, warmed, clothed and cared for, and that money is needed for these purposes.

It means that every citizen, especially YOU, is called upon in the interests of society to help save for good citizenship and comfortable, adoptive homes the children rescued and to be rescued, from homes of cruelty, squalor, dirt degradation, neglect, and the certainty if not rescued of growing up criminals, thieves, or prostitutes, or, in any event, a danger, a menace to, and a burden on, society.

Tag Day means that next Saturday, November 12th, 150 bright-faced girls will invade the whole city, "tackle" every citizen, and ask him or her to contribute little or much preferably more, to replenish the funds of the society.

It means that when you make your donation you will have a tag fixed on your person by their fingers, which will in turn mean that you are immune from further solicitation.

It also means that if you are anxious for another interview with a charming young lady you may pocket your tag and buy another.

It means that an average contribution of five cents each from 10,000 of the 17,000 persons in the city will mean $500; and an average of ten cents each, $1,000.

Now you know what Children's Aid Tag Day means.

Now you've got the meaning; but that does not mean that you need to insist in expressing your knowledge of its meaning.

ENGAGED 27 YEARS BEFORE MARRYING

Special to The Examiner.

ST. LOUIS, NOV. 10.—Two St. Louis models of loyalty constancy have been found. They are Miss Victoria Fitzroy, sixty-two years old, and Oscar Severance, sixty-eight, who for twenty-seven years have been engaged to wed; and who fulfilled their vows a few days ago before Justice Spies.

Mr. and Mrs. Severance are now mooning at the home of Mrs. Robert B. Ghiselin of No. 1,559 McPherson Avenue, niece of the bride, with whom they have been making their home for years.

It was on account of her niece and nephew that Miss Fitzroy postponed her engagement indefinitely, and put her fiance to a twenty-seven-year test.

When Mrs. Thomas Moore, her sister, died, she intrusted to Miss Fitzroy the care of her five children.

SELECT THE BEST MEN

From Farm and Dairy.

Robert Crickmore, Owatonna, Minn.

The manager of a creamery should be the secretary. The secretary has all records at all times to report and no one else could do as well without unnecessary duplication of work and trouble. The manager of a cooperative creamery should be the best man available from among the stockholders because all things being equal there is no man more interested than one who has a personal and financial interest in his business. A buttermaker usually is not a permanency and has trouble enough of his own without assuming those of the management. In some cases he needs to be managed.

The manager's sole qualification should not be that he is a good fellow. He should have some common sense and sense enough to use it. There are always one or more such men in each association. He should be fairly well acquainted with bookkeeping and know how to figure accurately. It is not absolutely necessary to have a business college graduate, although that should not count against him. Some of the most successful managers had no practical knowledge to begin with.

OTHER QUALIFICATIONS

He should not be thin-skinned, as the average creamery patron is not always considerate of the other fellows' feelings. If there is a drop in test from one month to the next the manager is to blame, but if it goes up he has nothing to do with it. He should listen to all complaints and then forget some of them. He should be courteous to the patrons and to the travelling fraternity and able to solve the numerous propositions put up to him by the smooth butter solicitors as they come decked in various garbs and their name is legion.

He should know how to test milk or cream so that he can show the dissatisfied patron that his test was right. He should buy all supplies and should consult with the buttermaker in regard to which salt, culture coal or color the latter can do the better work with. He should mix with other managers and buttermakers as much as possible, because there is always something to learn.

He should attend all meeting of his county creamery or dairy organizations, State and National, if possible. The average creamery manager does not draw a princely salary, usually from $100 to $150 per annum and that will not allow much for travelling expenses. He should take and read dairy and creamery papers and keep posted.

A man now at the business will not have all of these qualifications, as they must be acquired at a cost of time and experience. After a man has arrived at the efficient stage of the game he should be paid somewhere near what he is worth, as it takes time to educate a new man and costs money to correct some of his unavoidable errors of judgment.

A new manager—I guess some of us have been there: We were going to be economical and make a record. We bought cheaper coal because it was just as good, and all coal is black anyhow. The grates burned out because of clinkers, besides it took more time to fire, and the buttermaker could not be in two places at once and something suffered in consequence. Then the different offers of the solicitors were a nightmare. We did not know at first that a higher premium did not always result in a higher price per pound net. We divided shipments with two or more houses, not realizing that one good house and there are lots of them will do better with all of the goods as a long line is better than a short one. All of this experimenting is costly and usually to a great extent unnecessary.

Part of an address at the National Convention Buttermakers' Convention, Chicago, October 25, 1910.

ONLY A SIDE LINE

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. A. Johnston, Brome Co., Que.

Poultry is only a side line with us on our dairy farm. Here there is always plenty of work for the men with the general farm stock, as the care of the fowls is left entirely to me.

I endeavor to make a profit out of them from winter eggs. Our poultry house is a cheap one, frame building and we plan to do feeding all together. A mixture of equal parts of whole corn, wheat and wheat is scattered in the litter morning and night, about two small handfuls being given to three birds. At noon a dry mash of crushed oats, two parts, and cracked wheat, one part, is given in troughs nailed to the wall. Water or milk when we have it, is before them constantly. Twice a week they are given green cut bone. As they get milk frequently, meat foods are not so necessary.

With this system of feeding the birds are kept constantly busy and I find the busy hen to be the laying hen. In this section of Quebec there is never any trouble in disposing of winter eggs at good prices. In summer eggs will drop to 12 cents a dozen. This is when most of our neighbors are getting eggs. We prefer to get them when they are 35 to 40 cents and more a dozen.

AVERAGE YIELD OF COWS

From Farm and Dairy.

Editor, Farm and Dairy,—During the season of 1910, there have been such noteworthy variations in the average yield of cows month by month in different testing associations that it occurs to me you will be interested in some of these comparisons given in the following table:

ONTARIO—LOW AVERAGES

	Lbs. Milk	Lbs. Fat
April, Wallace	583	19
May, Brookhn	647	22
June, Camalachie	747	24
July, Corinth	711	21
August, Spencerville	596	19
September, Dalmeney	515	20

ONTARIO—GOOD AVERAGES

April, East Oxford	1114	35
May, Peterborough	1044	33
June, Black Creek	1162	38
July, Warsaw	1030	30
August, Central Smith	993	33
September, Trewern	931	32

May I point out that the high yields almost invariably are found where some attention has been paid to dairy records thereby enabling owners to cull out such cows as do not pay. This is naturally followed by better feeding, and breeding to a pure bred sire of decided dairy type. Chas. F. Whitley, In Charge of Dairy Records.

RECOMMENDED BOILING MILK

From Farm and Dairy.

The Toronto Medical Health Officer has recommended that all milk not up to the standard of certified milk or scientifically pasteurized be heated to the boiling point in the homes before being used. Eleven cases of typhoid fever in the City have recently been traced back to one dairy.

It is officially announced that the C.P.R. has decided to build four new steamers for a fast direct steamship service between Nova Scotia and Boston and New York. These vessels will be larger, faster, and stronger than any at present engaged on the North Atlantic Coast steamship traffic.

An outbreak of rabies is reported from the vicinity of Tecumseh, Ont. A cow bitten by a mad dog some time ago has developed a virulent case of the dread disease and had to be destroyed. The local authorities are much concerned at the failure to observe the muzzling law.

The annual report of the Minister of Justice shows that crime, like everything else in Canada, is on the increase though apparently the growth is much slower than in other and better things. There were 15,360 charges and 11,400 convictions for indictable offences during the year ended September 30, 1909, an increase of 110 charges and 115 convictions during the year.

Last year the four largest occupations in Canada employed the following numbers: Agriculture, 716,935; manufacturing, 389,873; domestic, 277,000; transportation, 234,230. Besides these, the professional class numbered 81,649, mining employed 36,305, the fisheries gave work to 25,051, the forest and lumber industry employed 16,213, and a miscellany of occupations engaged 4,413. In considering matters of trade, the fact must be borne in mind that agriculture is basic and is likely to remain for all time, the chief industry of Canada, and cannot be ignored.

In spite of fickle weather, which tended to mar the attendance at the Canadian National Apple Show, Vancouver, during the first two days of the show, the attendance is reported to have been phenomenal. Kelowna, in fertile Okanagon Valley won the grand sweep and stood pre-eminent in the exhibition. Quebec exhibits of good hard sweet apples were admired by visitors. The Ontario fruit, grown under various climatic conditions presented a dazzling difference in color, though uniform in size, and excited the admiration of all. The show is said to have been the largest ever held on the American continent.

CARE OF HENS

From Farm and Dairy.

The busy hen is the laying hen. Plan to have lots of litter in the house this winter.

Have you laid in a supply of grit for the winter? A load of coarse sand makes good, cheap grit. Get it now.

The young cockerels are still running with the pullets in many flocks. Separate them and prepare them for market. Likewise the old hens which are not going to be carried over this winter. They should have been sold long ago.

It is not necessary to have the pullets in the basement to keep them warm. Give them a dry, light house and they will live and lay as they never will in that damp basement.

Nothing is gained by having a male with the laying flock all winter. It is much better to keep the sexes separate. You will get more eggs and better eggs.

Ask Yourself These Questions

And Find Out if You Have Kidney Disorders. Also Make This Test.

Have you pains in the back over the kidneys?

Have you urinary disorders?

Do you suffer from severe headache, dizziness or defective eyesight?

Is the skin dry and harsh?

Are you failing in health and strength and suffering from rheumatic pains or swelling of the limbs?

These are a few of the symptoms of kidney disease and here is the test:

If the urine after standing for twenty-four hours is cloudy, milky or has particles floating about in it, or if there is a sediment in the bottom of the vessel, your kidneys are diseased.

There is no time to lose in beginning the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. Delay means the development of Bright's disease, and you do not want to take any chances with that. Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills will help you more quickly than any treatment you can obtain, and that is one reason why they are so successful and popular.

Mr. W. H. Mosher, South Augusta, Grenville county, Ont., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills and firmly believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease, and this treatment has cured me. When I began the use of these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any other man. Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills are an excellent medicine. This statement is certified to by the Rev. E. H. Emett, Baptist minister, of Brockville, Ont.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on every box. These are for your protection against imitations and substitutes.

SUFFERED THREE YEARS

Till Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cured his Kidney Trouble

There are few diseases that cause more acute suffering than Kidney Trouble, and Mr. F. A. Thomas, of Sudbury, Ont., is one of those who know it. He writes:

"For over three years I suffered from kidney disease. First I thought I had sprained my back, for suddenly the pain would catch the small of my back and it would be impossible for me to straighten myself up for several minutes. A dull ache across the kidneys was always present, my urine was thick and cloudy, and passing it caused a burning, scalding pain. Tried medicines, but they failed. I was advised to try Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, as they had cured my wife years before. A few boxes affected a complete cure. I now enjoy the blessings of good health, which is due to this remedy."

Don't neglect kidney trouble—it's too dangerous as well as too painful. That old, reliable family remedy, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, has cured thousands and will cure you. TO SUCCEED WITH POULTRY

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. Annie L. Jull, Chateauguay Co., Que.

Cleanliness and an abundance of air and light in the house are important requirements, along with plenty of fresh, cool water and a variety of food, to success with poultry. We have a small poultry house built in an old orchard for winter use. We now use small colony houses that can be moved to new locations during the summer. The chickens are hatched in these houses in the spring and usually go home to roost. A coating of lime, with a little dissolved copper sulphate and kerosene in it to prevent the germs of disease and mites from increasing, is given these houses in early spring, and again at midsummer.

When the poultry are housed in the fall, it is well to have the roosts of the house low at first. Round poles, not more than two and a half inches in diameter make good roosts. These should be painted with kerosene, in which is a little linseed oil. The latter does not evaporate but hardens on the poles and destroys any insects with which it comes in contact.

THE GOOD ALWAYS IN DEMAND

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. J. M. Culver, Huron Co., Ont.

We would not think of marketing roasters in the fall without first testing them two or three weeks of pen fattening. The demand for poorly fitted birds is always slack and the prices not to remunerative, but for first class roasters there is always a good demand at prices which yield a profit. Our primary interest in the poultry industry is winter eggs. The surplus of cockerels, however, we market as roasters.

The most convenient way of killing a bird is to wrench its neck. The blood then collects in the neck of the bird but does not run out making the work of plucking dirty and disagreeable as is the case when the head is cut off. We have tried cutting the veins in the neck through the mouth, but this method necessitates tying bird up by the feet and takes more time than breaking the neck. If the bird is plucked immediately, the feathers will come out by the handful without tearing the skin at all. Scalding, while it makes the work of plucking easier, gives the skin a disagreeable color, spoils the keeping qualities and lowers the value of the fowl.

The way the birds are to be dressed for market depends upon our class of trade. The housewife prefers to buy the bird dressed, and if we dress in this way, we charge from two to four cents a pound more than when sold undrawn with head and feet on.

The last few years we have found that it is much more satisfactory to sell the birds while alive to some of our large produce houses that will pay a good price for good birds.

PINK ROT

From Farm and Dairy.

Will pink rot develop on apples after being put in barrels and subjected to 80 and 90 degrees of heat for two days or more? How long will it take a worm to mature if the egg is there under the same heat?—J. J. P., Wellington Co., Ont.

Pink Rot is much more likely to develop on apples packed at a high temperature than on those packed at a low temperature. This disease invariably follows scab or some injury to the skin of the apples. It develops wherever there is broken skin or a scab spot.

Apple worms under a temperature of 80 degrees or 90 degrees would still be active and if they were small when the apples were packed they would probably only require a few days in which to mature. It is particularly a difficult matter to ship apples any distance that have been packed at such a high temperature. It is much safer to have the apples cool before they go into a barrel.—Prof. J. W. Crow, O.A.C., Guelph, Ont.

DESERVES BETTER SUPPORT

From Farm and Dairy.

"The Ontario Agricultural College has never had the support from the people of Ontario that it has deserved," said Prof. W. J. Kennedy, an Ontario farmer's son who has made a name for himself in the United States where he is professor of Animal Husbandry, at the Iowa State Agricultural College. Professor Kennedy was speaking at a meeting of Holstein breeders held in Brockville recently at the time he assisted in the purchase of 52 head of pure bred Holsteins in that section by an American buyer.

"The Guelph College", continued Professor Kennedy, "has sent some 40 young men to the United States who are leaders in agricultural matters. If the Ontario Minister of Agriculture would show the same aggressiveness in dealing with his Department as Premier Whitney has shown, he would soon place the Guelph College on a better footing.

"The farmers of Ontario should boost the College. For every $25 you spend on the Guelph College, you will get $100 back through the value of the additional information it will be enabled to give you. In the State of Iowa there was a time when the farmers did not have much faith in the College, but that day is past. They now work for the College as one man."

COST OF POWER

From Farm and Dairy.

The farmers of Waterloo County have formed an organization and will shortly wait on the Hydro-Electric Commission to learn the cost of power to them. The farmers are very enthusiastic and expect soon to have their homes lighted and stationary machinery run by Niagara power.

During September industrial accidents occurred to 272 individual workpeople in Canada. Of these, 92 were fatal and 181 resulted in serious injuries. Agriculture had the least with 22 killed and 35 injured, and the railway service came second with 15 killed and 13 injured.

Mr. E. S. Archibald, B.A., B.S.A., has been appointed Agriculturist and Farm Superintendent at the Agricultural College, Truro, N.S. During the past two years he has been on the staff of the Agricultural College at Truro in the capacity of lecturer in Live Stock and Field Husbandry and Experimentalist.

ABOUT APPLES

From Farm and Dairy.

"The British Columbia real estate man who had an exhibit at the Central Exhibition," said Mr. McNeill, Chief of the Fruit Division, in an address in Stormont Co., recently, "told some big stories about the profits in different orchards in British Columbia, and no doubt these stories were true. But if Ontario real estate men were equally enterprising they could match the best of these stories without the slightest difficulty.

"For instance, yesterday I went through an orchard near Morrisburg containing one and a third acres, chiefly McIntosh Red, Fameuse and Wealthy. The owner told me that he had sold the apples this year on the trees, the buyer taking all risks of weather and markets, the price stipulated being $400, cash on delivery of the apples.

"I was anxious to know the net profit to the grower, and therefore asked him what the cost was of the season's care of the orchard. He replied that this net cash outlay was $6.75, and his own work in addition would be probably $6 more. I afterwards verified these facts."

FOR KEEPING CABBAGE

From Farm and Dairy.

E. F. Lucas, Carleton Co., N.S.

For keeping cabbage and sprouts there is nothing better than the old fashioned pit. To make it a trench wide enough for the head and so deep that when the cabbage are in it, head down, only the root will be above the ground. The pit is lined with straw or boards, and boards keep the heads clean. Over the heads a little straw is placed, or a new leave then the trench is partially filled with earth. Before winter sets in the trench is filled to make a roof over the roots and a covering of litter is added after the ground is frozen solidly. In the spring the heads come up crisp and delicious. This is a time-honored method which has defied all attempts at improvement.

Heads intended for early spring use may be put in paper sacks which are tied closely above the roots, then hung from the wall or ceiling of a cool dry cellar. They will keep for several weeks, but are liable to decay more than is good for them before eating.

To store cabbage so that it will be green and fresh when wanted is not difficult. It is among the easiest of all vegetables to keep. With a little care it can be had in good condition at all times from fall till spring. Only such heads as are solid and mature should be selected. Those that have begun to split should be discarded. They will do for immediate use, but do not keep well. Pull them and if not perfectly dry stand them on their heads under cover till they are. It will do no harm to treat them in this way, anyhow, for a few days.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Coon Hunting With A Hoe New Pastime In Warsaw

Deer Hunters Are Meeting With Success According to the Reports that Have Reached the Dummer Capital.

INTERESTING ITEMS

Special to The Examiner.

WARSAW, ONT., NOV. 8.—Coon-hunting around the village is one of the pastimes that those indulge in who cannot find the time to go farther afield after larger game. Among the successful hunters in this regard is Mr. Jas. Clifford, who on Saturday night captured a fine specimen of the raccoon family with a hoe. He heard it feasting in the cornfield, and as it was after dark, he decided that a gun would not be of much use. So with a hoe over his shoulder and a collie dog at his heels, he went after the animal. The dog put it up a tree, which Mr. Clifford had no difficulty in climbing, and with one stroke he despatched it with the hoe.

Reports are coming in from the hunting camps in the north, and up to Saturday night the parties met with varying success. Nathan Payne's party secured two last week, another got four and another none. Old hunters say that hunting is not easy this autumn on account of so much water lying in the swamps. Deer evade the hounds in this and never reach the lakes.

Cheese making in the Warsaw Cheese Factory has been brought to a close for this season, and Mr. Chas. Calder is now turning his attention to butter making.

Messrs. H. G. E. Choate, Warsaw, and Bert Huston, Toronto, left on Tuesday morning for Deer Bay on a partridge and duck hunting expedition.

Mrs. Cox Lakefield, is spending a few weeks with Miss Lukey.

Mr. Robt. Matthews sustained a slight accident last week at his own home, and has not since been able to attend to his business. He slipped on the linoleum in the hallway of his house.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Selkirk, Buffalo, N. Y., who have been visiting relatives, left here for home last Friday.

Rev. Cecil Brown who is to take charge of the mission of Young's Point and Warsaw, is expected to preach in St. Mark's Church here on Sunday.

LAKEHURST PEOPLE HAVE A GHOST SCARE

Special to The Examiner.

LAKEHURST, NOV. 8.—Miss Flynn, together with the young people of S. S. No. 3, is preparing a concert for the evening of the 25th. Quite a treat is being looked forward to, and it is hoped it will be well attended.

Rev. Dr. Marvin is to preach anniversary services in the Methodist Church here next Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark of Ennismore visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Thompson on last Sunday.

Mr. Jas. McGuire has returned from his trip to the West. He is quite delighted with what promising country, and thinks of moving there in the spring.

One of our neighbors had quite a startling experience the other night. He and his wife had been to town, and on their return were surprised to notice that their house was lit up. Knowing they had left no one at home and had securely locked all doors before leaving, they were at a loss to account for the illumination. Not being able to imagine any natural causes, they at once ascribed the illumination to supernatural causes, and not caring to board the ghost in his den they decided to go for his brother, who lived some three miles distant, thinking, no doubt, there was safety in numbers. When they returned with his brother and another friend the light still remained and baffled all attempts at explanation, until at length the friend screwed his courage up to the point of cautiously approaching the window and peeping in, when he beheld the man's brother-in-law sitting with his head on his hands, slepily awaiting the return of his host and hostess.

Cedardale cheese factory has suspended operations for another season. No longer the merry rattle of the milk wagons wakes us from our profound morning slumbers. Now the sounds that have grown familiar to our ear are the hum of the separator and the thump of the churn.

Several of our young men sought recreation after their hard summer's toil be taking to the woods to search for deer. Some of them, however, returned empty handed on Saturday night.

Miss May McConnell has returned after spending her Thanksgiving holiday with her parents.

Mr. Bert Atkinson spent Saturday evening at the home of Mr. A. L. Shearer.

Mr. A. Wilson Jr. attended the fall assizes as juryman a short time ago.

Messrs. Bert Eson and Wallace Shearer had quite an exciting experience while hunting on Bald Lake on Monday. While attempting to shoot a duck they unfortunately capsized the canoe, and had it not been for the timely assistance of Mr. Wm. Coons, the accident might easily have ended very seriously. As it was they escaped with no more serious result than a rather chilly dip.

Mr. Drake preached his initial sermon in Knox Presbyterian Church on Sunday.

Mr. A. G. Shearer has a Greystone turnip that we fancy can eclipse most things along that line. It weighs thirty-one pounds, and is truly a monster. The root crop generally has been very good here.

LIFE IN PALESTINE

From Farm and Dairy.

(Washington Post)

"My impression of the primitive conditions of life in Palestine was somewhat spoiled by a bit of American enterprise during my trip through the Holy Land this summer," said Milton R. Wells.

"With about 20 other Americans I made the usual tourists' journey to all the points of interest. Almost everywhere we found the people living under practically the conditions of 2,000 years ago. Of course, we got a little jolt when we walked into the telegraph office in Jerusalem, and later sat down to a regular table d'hote dinner in the hotel. But we were informed that, as soon as we left the city and got into the country, we would find ourselves in a world of centuries ago.

"This was true for a while. But imagine my surprise when taking a drive through the country in Lebanon region, about half way between Beyrout and Damascus, to see a big steam plow tearing up the earth at a prodigious rate. We might just as well have been looking at a big farm in North Dakota. Naturally I was somewhat curious, and I made an investigation. I learned that an agent of an American implement firm was making a demonstration for the benefit of the natives. He had been in the neighborhood for about a month. I was interested, of course, and he seemed to be willing to talk. As a result I got a lot of information that usually doesn't go with a tour through the Holy Land.

"The plow used by the native Syrian is nothing but a forked stick. It is drawn by oxen. This primitive plow doesn't make much of a furrow, and it takes two men and a yoke of oxen an entire day to plow half an acre. Plowing begins early in the spring and continues until July. By that time the soil is hard, and the difficulty in turning it up increases. The American demonstrator said the natives were absolutely wonderstruck by the rapidity and ease with which the ground was prepared for planting by modern machinery. With two men in one day, he said, the steam plow did as much work as could be accomplished by 60 men and 40 oxen with the native implements."

"PIMPLES"

Broke Out All Over Her Face.

Pimples are caused, almost entirely, by bad blood, and there is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to get at the seat of the trouble by using a good reliable blood purifying medicine.

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for 35 years, and is one of the very best blood medicines procurable. After using it you will find that the pimples have disappeared, and you will have a beautiful clear complexion.

Mrs. Robert McNab, Badjeros, Ont., writes:—"I am greatly pleased to report the benefit I have derived from the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. About a year ago I became so weak and run down I could scarcely walk, and pimples broke out all over my face. I tried one thing after another, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I was advised by a lady friend to try B.B.B. and before I had used one bottle I felt it was doing me good so I used three bottles, and I am now well and strong, and the pimples have all disappeared."

CARE OF CELERY

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. J. M. McDonald, Middlesex Co., Ont.

Much as we all appreciate celery in its season it will be more appreciated if properly stored and carried over for use in the winter months when greens are so scarce. If celery is to be carried over in storage, we must first have a winter variety of celery and take care that it is not completely blanched when placed in storage. If blanched, the celery is almost certain to rot in the pit. At the approach of winter, the plants are taken up, the roots trimmed and then packed closely together in the pit where they will complete blanching and come out late in winter or next spring in capital condition for use.

In storing our celery, a pit is dug with square sides just as deep as the celery is high. The leafy top of the celery is then trimmed and the stocks packed closely together in this pit. An A-shaped roof made of two wide boards is then placed over the pit to shed the rain. In selecting the location for this pit, a ridge should be chosen so that the water will run away readily from either side. Cover the boards with five or six inches of straw. Over this lay old burlap sacks and cover the whole with earth to a depth of six inches.

The main difficulty with this method of storing celery is that a great deal of difficulty is involved when getting the celery out when needed. If we have no cellar however, where the temperature is sufficiently steady to keep the celery properly. We are never able to use all the celery that we have. A ready market is found among our neighbors for the surplus at good prices. We believe that if we were depending on gardening for a living that no branch of market gardening would be more profitable than the growing of celery and the carrying it over over for sale in the winter and spring months.

FEEDING CALVES

From Farm and Dairy.

G. A. Brethen, Peterboro Co., Ont.

My calves are fed for a short time at first four pounds whole milk three times a day. Later on this amount is given in two feeds. As soon as the calves begin to eat a little, which is very early, skim milk is gradually substituted.

After the cheese factory starts skim milk is replaced by whole milk and water, the quantity of water added being regulated according to the age and development of the calf. In addition to milk my calves are fed ensilage, roots, clover, hay, whole oats, bran, and some oat chop. They are "home-brews," and are fed very little but what is grown and produced on the home farm.

Good calves may be raised on artificial calf-foods and so forth, but in a cheese factory district, at least, with milk wholesaling at from 75c. to $1.00 a cwt., it hardly pays to rob the calf of nature's food—its dam's milk. To the average farmer, however, 150 lbs of milk (the feed for 12 young calves) looks bigger at $1.25 in a factory can than it would if making $2.00 worth of calf.

Good care, which includes not only sufficient food and water but also extra precaution, is also essential in guarding against fires, vermin, and disease. Well raised calves are a source of satisfaction to their owner; but apparently at no stage in the animals' career is it so often neglected and at such a loss.

We frequently nowadays see articles dealing with the better feeding of the dairy cow. From my experience, I believe good feed, good care with the additional "ounce of prevention" is equally as well with the dairy calf.

EVERY HOUSEWIFE HER OWN CHEMIST

THE Kitchen a Laboratory Now, Where All Foods and Drinks Can Be Scientifically Tested for Adulteration, Fraud or Poison.

Dr. Allyn.

Copyright, 1910 by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.

ALL hail to the kitchen chemist, who with logic absolute the gulls of grocers can refute! Every housewife, according to the new learning, can practise chemistry in connection with the ordinary cooking operations, and that without going deep into the abstruse theories of science. She can guard her family against the craft and greed of the dishonest manufacturer and within a few minutes pronounce definitely upon the purity of any food product that may have been delivered at her door.

The passing of the pure food and drug act has stimulated the study of the chemistry of what Americans eat and drink to such an extent that within a few months there has sprung up a band of practitioners who have made the kitchen sink a laboratory and the pantry a college of research.

One of the features of the Pure Food Exposition recently held in Madison Square Garden, New York, was a fully equipped food laboratory conducted by the Massachusetts State Normal School, of Westfield, in which girl student chemists, under the supervision of their instructor, Professor Lewis B. Allyn, made analyses of groceries. They were able before the eyes of thousands of visitors to determine whether there was starch in the sausage, chicory in the coffee, alum in the baking powder or benzoate of soda and aniline in the tomato catsup.

To the uninitiated they seemed to accomplish wonders, yet what they did was no more than any other intelligent young women might have been able to accomplish, and that with a much less knowledge of chemistry than that which was possessed by the fair demonstrators. In fact, the institution under the auspices of which these simple and effective tests were publicly made issues a handbook which contains simple directions for making analyses without the aid of any fundamental knowledge of chemistry at all.

"Cooking," remarked Professor Allen, "is in itself chemistry and some of its processes are as elaborate and complicated as those which are carried on in any laboratory. As soon as women thoroughly realize this and as soon as they perceive how readily tests of the purity of food products can be made, and at what trifling cost, I think that they will all become chemists on their own account. There is no reason why any woman, even without any training in science, should not be able to tell whether the quality of the ordinary supplies of the kitchen is up to standard or whether there has been or has not been adulteration.

"There is nothing mysterious about chemistry and, contrary to the common belief, chemical glassware is quite cheap. The reagents which are employed may be obtained from any druggist at a trifling cost. In fact, the entire expenditure for the material required in this domestic laboratory need not be more than four or five dollars. Many of the experiments may be conducted with the ordinary vessels which are always at hand."

The Equipment.

Those pieces not usually found in a kitchen which are required to supplement the equipment of a household chemist are as follow:—

Alcohol lamp.
Half pint cup white enamel ware.
One package five inch filter paper.
One three inch glass funnel.
One glass graduate, hundred cubic centimetres.
One lactometer.
One medicine dropper or fountain pen filler.
One three inch plain glass sauce dish.
One eight inch glass stirring rod.
One dozen six inch test tubes.
Rental two ounce phials.

It is recommended that the chemicals and solutions of various kinds be kept in a cabinet which may be locked when the apparatus is not in use, so that there may be no injury to the younger and impulsive members of the household. Before proceeding with any of the tests Professor Allyn gives a few simple general instructions.

Acids should be kept from the hand, face, clothing and metals. If any are spilled they should be rinsed off with water and then with a little dilute liquid ammonia or a strong solution of baking powder. If any of the caustic reagents accidentally find their way to hands or clothing applications of vinegar are recommended.

Occasionally, as in the benzoate of soda test, it is necessary to employ chloroform or ether, and when either is used it should be evaporated in the open air. It is one of the rules at all laboratories, and as important as the advice concerning not pointing a loaded gun at anybody, that no one is ever to look into a test tube when its contents are undergoing a chemical change. Hold the vessel up and look through it.

One of the fruitful sources of derangements of the digestive organs is the use of baking powder in which are found such harsh chemical compounds as alum and ammonia. There are cobalts, cheaper or more specific appeal than the test for the product. A pure baking powder should entirely dissolve.

Miss Olive Searle Making a Test of Coffee.

Testing Olive Oil; the Presence of Cotton Seed Shown by Dark Red Layer When Sulphuric Acid Is Added.

Milk Preserved with Formaldehyde Turns Purple Under Chemical Tests.

To determine if ammonia be present shake up a teaspoonful of baking powder with two ounces of cold water and filter. Then boil the filtrate in a small enamel ware cup with about half its volume of a ten per cent solution of sodium hydroxide. Place over the vapor from the boiling mixture a strip of red litmus paper, and if ammonia be present the paper will turn blue.

To determine if alum has been employed in preparing the mixture put a tablespoonful of the substance under suspicion in a clean white teacup and add a teaspoonful of water. Then add ten drops of tincture of logwood and an equal volume of a solution of carbonate of ammonia. The color of the liquid in the cup turns from lavender to blue if there are any traces of alum in the baking powder and the bluish tint does not disappear on boiling. The use of alum is considered objectionable from a dietetic standpoint and also because the chemical has considerably less raising power than the same amount of cream of tartar. The best baking powders are in fact compounded of soda and cream of tartar or tartaric acid.

One of the quickest tests is that for the purity of ground coffee. To accept the ground coffee from any grocer is the highest mark of confidence that a housewife can bestow upon him. In these days she need not ever take coffee on faith. Fill a tumbler or preferably a tall test tube with cold water to within a half inch or so of the top. Then sprinkle upon the surface of the water a teaspoonful of the coffee under suspicion. If the coffee be pure it will immediately sink to the bottom of the tumbler, leaving the water above it perfectly clear. If there be chicory in the coffee it will color the water a dark brown. If there be burned cereals in the coffee they will float on the surface of the water, while if there be any considerable amount of chicory present it will form a dark sediment on the bottom of the tumbler.

One of the deceptions practised with regard to tea is the treating of it with pigments or with graphite to increase its weight and to conceal the fact that the leaves have already had much of their virtue abstracted from them by a first drawing. A tablespoonful of the suspected sample should be placed in a wide mouthed bottle and shaken vigorously with six times the bulk of cold water. Strain the mixture through a sieve, and the insoluble mineral substances which were employed in the sophistication will sink to the bottom of the bottle. Tests made by Professor Allyn show that many of the cheap teas in the market contain a very large percentage of insoluble mineral substances.

Olive Oil Test.

There is perhaps no more common deception practised upon the housewife than that of substituting cottonseed oil for the pure olive product. At the present time no woman need pay any attention to the specious legend upon gilt and embossed labels. Many a pretentious and aristocratic looking bottle contains oil which came not from the groves of sunny Italy, but from the cotton fields of the South.

Place a tablespoonful of the oil under investigation in a clean, white teacup, or, better still, a footed test tube, and add an equal amount of nitric acid; stir carefully with a glass rod. If the oil be pure it should turn in a few minutes from a pale to a dark green. If the fluid changes to brown or red or orange the presence of an adulterant is indicated.

Place a teacup containing the oil to which acid has been added in a dish of boiling water for five minutes. Pure oil under those conditions will turn pale yellow, or orange yellow, and after standing from twelve to eighteen hours will become a yellow solid.

The most satisfactory test for cottonseed oil consists of placing a tablespoonful of the suspected oil in a small bottle and adding an equal amount of Halphen's reagent. Heat the contents of the bottle in a pint of water, to which three tablespoonfuls of salt have been added, for fifteen minutes. The presence of cottonseed oil is evident if a layer of red appears in the mixture, the depth of this layer indicating the percentage of the cheaper oil which the manufacturer has added. The reagent may be obtained from any druggist and should be used with caution, as the carbon disulphide, which is one of its constituents, is inflammable. The bottle employed should be corked with a loosely fitting plug of cotton during the test.

There are many of the so-called lards on the market which also contain cottonseed oil, and the test for them may be conducted in the same manner with the use of the Halphen reagent.

All this is without prejudice to cottonseed oil as a product when honestly labelled as such, for it is a clean product and in no way deleterious. Its use is merely a matter of individual preference. In these days, however, the housewife of an investigating turn of mind will not pay olive oil prices for the product which contains a large proportion of the cheaper fluids extracted from the cottonseed or the peanut.

Tomato catsup has been the subject of much discussion, and its manufacturers are required to definitely state whether or not they have used artificial coloring or preservatives in its preparation. It is the simplest thing in the world to find out. For coloring matter the double dyeing process is the simplest. Mix two tablespoonfuls of the sample in half a pint of water, [illegible] the mixture of cornstarch

Jams, jellies, catsup, confectionery, dessert powders and anything of a solid or semi solid nature may be subjected to this test. Add to the mixture a drop of hydrochloric acid; or boil a piece of white woollen cloth about four inches square in soap and water and rinse thoroughly, so that all trace of wool oil may be eliminated.

Tear off a square inch of this prepared cloth and place it aside for future reference. Boil the larger piece in the sample for five or ten minutes or until it is strongly colored. Then take it out and wash it in cold water. Eliminate as much color as possible from the cloth by boiling it in half a cupful of water to which a spoonful of ammonia has been added. Remove the cloth and throw it away. Add a slight excess of hydrochloric acid to the ammonia solution, which may be determined by the fact that blue litmus paper will turn red when immersed in it. To this mixture add the second and smaller piece of cloth and boil it.

If the dye is of vegetable origin the small piece of cloth will be practically uncolored. If the dye is aniline or is a coal tar product of any kind the small cloth will have a color which cannot be removed by simple washing.

Fruits and Jams.

The natural colors of preserved fruits and jams and the like cannot leave any marked effect upon wool cloth, and it will produce only a slight tinge which scarcely survives the washing process. It was possible from many samples of soda water syrups and such fluids to obtain colors gay enough for yeast side ball dresses.

Many of the orange and lemon extracts contain coal tar dyes, which are readily detected, while the presence of turmeric in these extracts is determined by a simple chemical test in which borax and hydrochloric acid are employed. Caramel is a burnt sugar solution which is frequently used to artificially color vinegar, distilled liquors and flavoring extracts, and thus mask an inferior quality. Place a teaspoonful of the suspected liquor in a small round vial and add twice as much more amyl alcohol. If there is caramel present the liquid will be nearly decolorized as the caramel is thrown out of solution and sinks to the bottom of the vessel.

The test for the presence of added water in milk is very simple and a very good lactometer can be obtained for less than a dollar. Professor Allyn says a very satisfactory instrument may be obtained for sixty cents. Place a thermometer in milk the temperature of which should not vary much from 60 degrees Fahrenheit. Directions accompany the instruments.

If the yellow color of milk has been attained by aniline dye the test is quickly applied, which will detect it.

The vegetable annatto coloring, which is the most frequently used in dairy products, is detected by shaking up a teaspoonful of milk with twice that amount of ether. When the liquids have separated pour off the upper layer into a teacup, which is placed in hot water until the liquid has evaporated. Add a few drops of ammonia and pour the residue upon filter paper. The handbook specifies that the fat will remain as a residue and that the annatto will collect in the pores of the paper and impart to the fabric a decided orange tone.

One of the most dangerous preservatives employed for keeping milk is formaldehyde. The housewife is directed to place four tablespoonfuls of the milk concerning which she has doubts in a teacup and to add thereto the same amount of hydrochloric acid and a drop of ferric chloride. Five minutes later if the milk be pure it will be uncolored, while if it has been preserved by the dangerous formaldehyde it will be lavender or purple in hue.

If borax be present in milk it will impart a red or orange color to a teaspoonful of the fluid which has previously been treated in a clear glass dish with one drop of hydrochloric acid and five drops of tincture of turmeric.

Soap which contains free alkali should not be used, for although it will wash clothes it will at the same time eat into their fibres. To be sure that soap will not be harmful shave off into a powder half a teaspoonful and place it in a five ounce bottle. To this add four teaspoonfuls of strong alcohol and warm the mixture gently by immersing the container in warm water, shaking the bottle several times. Filter the mixture and add to the filtrate two drops of phenolphthalein solution. If a pink color appears free alkali is present and the soap should not be used for fine laundry purposes.

The demonstrations at the recent exhibition were made by the Misses Louise Buschmann, Olive Searle and Agnes Shea, who have been trained as teachers at the Normal School and belong to a group of young women whose influence on the side of better conditions in the realm of household management is becoming an important factor [illegible]

In The Procession

"It's his influoenzer, sir," said the girl with the Rob Roy shawl. "He ain't cryin', be you, Hezekiah Bill?"

"No," said the boy, knuckling desperately at his eyelids to drive the tears inside again if he could. "I'm laughin'. I'm laughin' as hard as ever I can laugh."

"You wicked little fibber!" I said, for a double procession of tears was promenading down his face. "You're crying as hard as ever you can cry. I believe you're crying for cold."

"Not he, sir," said the girl with the Rob Roy shawl. "You ain't cold, be you Hezekiah Bill?"

"I ain't cold, Alice Amelia," the boy said, shivering all down his legs all the time.

"You small, enormous fibber!" I said, assuming a horrified air. "You're crying. You're cold. Your nose is as blue as blue!"

"It's his influoenzer, sir," the girl said again. "Never mind about him, sir—he's all right. So'm I."

"You?" I said. "Why, you plucky imposter, I believe you've been crying yourself. What do you mean by it? What're you doing in the streets, a day like this? What're you marching in the road for? What do you mean by it, hey?"

I don't know much about children myself never had any don't want any—but I understand that if you want to keep them straight you've got to be awfully severe. So "What're you doing here? Who are you?" I said again.

"We'm out-o'-works, sir," the amazing Alice Amelia told me. "Wem' in the procession, sir, please don't stop us, sir, come along. Hezekiah Bill oh, please sir, don't stop us no more!"

I was just back from golf at Richmond, and, coming up from the Underground, I had emerged upon the Strand at Charing Cross. Just at that moment the sad procession of the Unemployed was passing. It was the first time I had seen it. I stood thunder-struck, and went very hot, although it was a bitter February day. A nor-easter was scouring the Strand, it was not weather to stand about in, yet I stood and stared.

I stared at the pressing problem of poverty, endeavoring by the aid of such skill in physiognomy as a man of fifty comes to possess (unless he's a fool) to discover which of the workless were destitute by their own fault, and which were merely unemployed and hardly to blame.

Some of the processionists I could tell it by their faces and the shape of their heads had been born to trouble as the sparks fly upwards—some of them never ought to have had any fathers and mothers I mean, their fathers and mothers never ought to have had them; they were predestined to inefficiency, failure, and consequent misery, from the day of their birth. Some others of them, I could see, were genuine cases able to work and willing to work, if they could happen on work to do.

Others of them I knew for the stuff that jailbirds are made of—atrophied on the moral side, others were plainly consumptive, and therefore impotent for regular labor, and some had the simple and puzzled look of peasants come to town, in a desert of brick-and-mortar, and all astray.

"Poor beggars!" I said. I almost felt ashamed of my own advantages—my long legs, broad chest, careful schooling, and easy inherited family solicitors' connection, which I have shown no special merit in carrying on. "Poor beggars!" I said again, and my shoulders went up in a shrug and a sigh.

Then a pair of hands fell on my shoulders. "Terrible! terrible!" a voice said sadly in my ear. "The beginning of the end of the Empire, I tell you!"

I turned, and saw a friend of mine—a young gentleman of seventy-six or so—one of the greatest public donors alive, and still alert and sturdy, walking that keen day, and not even a muffler at his throat or an overcoat on his back, the wonderful boy!

"The downfall of the Empire, I tell you," said he, and off he went to seek a site for another Convalescent Home or Free Library or something, and as for myself, I turned eastwards, going up the Strand towards the tail of the straggling procession.

The tail of the procession was Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill: they were in the post of honour: they brought up the rear of the threatened riot.

No, let me be accurate: the actual rear-guard was a benevolent mounted Bobby. I don't know him at all—I know very few policemen, though I am told that it is convenient sometimes to possess a personal acquaintance with the police. I don't know this mounted constable, but I am sure he is benevolent because he made his horse crab softly and that was not because he didn't know how to ride and was afraid of falling off. I could see that he could ride as well as any of my chums in Rotten Row. No, he made his horse go softly because Hezekiah Bill and Alice Amelia were just in front of his charger's nose.

I suppose his charger's nose was six inches higher in the air than Hezekiah Bill's hay-colored head. The color of the boy's hair must have been a temptation to the horse, and by a slight effort, and without lowering his noble teeth, the charger might have crept the imitation wheat-ears in Alice Amelia's hat no doubt, a relic of her mother. Had the charger been a bull he must have grown irritated at the squares of red in Alice Amelia's shawl also once her mother's. From these circumstances you may guess the height of the two little out-o'-works.

I am no judge of the ages of children, but Hezekiah Bill might be seven, I thought, and short even for that. Alice Amelia looked a thin eleven. I have described her costume.

Hezekiah Bill's is not worth describing: the Tailor and Cutter's critic would say that Hezekiah Bill's jacket lacked style, and his trousers cut: they certainly lacked warmth and comfort. Pity the bonified Unemployed "a home-made banner said in the procession. Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill looked very bonified indeed.

It is a dangerous thing to rush into the roadway of the Strand about one o'clock in the afternoon, especially where there is no crossing nor shelter. Yet I tell you the ridiculous thing I did. I rushed into the roadway, caught hold of Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill and dragged them on to the footpath, just in front of a hoop-la-la's pull of diamonds and gold. The benevolent mounted Bobby regarded me approvingly: he was quite willing that I should kidnap Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill. I'll take care of them, officer," I said to him, speaking louder than it is good manners to do and on the procession went, shepherded by the benevolent mounted Bobby, and heavy Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill dragged. It was then that the conversation already recorded began.

There's a remarkable eating-shop quite handy to that part of the Strand, a shop where they serve your food like your mother used to cook it. At least they say so, really, let us say, and I dare say it is true, though I have no means of telling because my mother never used to cook anything at all. I hustled Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill inside that shop, set them down at a little marble table, and called half a dozen waiters to me at once.

"Coffee?" I said. "Tea? Milk? Buns? Rolls-and-butter? Sandwiches? Ham? Tongue? Sausages?"

"Shortbread?" a waitress asked.

"Shortbreads, of course! Lunch-breads, also?"

"And mutton-pies, sir?"

"Mutton-pies! Everything!" and ah, if you could have seen Alice Amelia drinking tea and Hezekiah Bill devouring shortbread and sausage rolls!

"Well," I enquired, "is it like your mother cooks it, hey?"

"No, sir," said Hezekiah Bill, indistinctly, for his mouth was full.

"Then why isn't it?" I said curtly. "They say it is Here, waitress!" and in a minute or so I should have called up and blamed the whole shop.

"Please, sir, it couldn't," Alice Amelia's lip trembled. "Please, sir, mother's dead."

Something like a lump of dry bun seemed to stick in my own throat just then, though as a bun is a thing that I detest, the thing in my throat must have been emotion, not bun, and I detest emotion. If I had been wearing my eye-glass, I daresay I should have had to let it drop, and then rub it hard. I was so angry with myself for feeling like that: so stupid of me. She was no mother of I looked at the children's eyes and said, "Oh, oh don't you tell me you aren't crying now!"

"I know I am, sir," Alice Amelia whimpered. "But Hezekiah Bill isn't. Boys is brave. Boys don't cry. Father says so. It's only his influoenzer, sir—isn't it, Hezekiah Bill?"

"It's—it's the pepper—in the mutsir," Mrs. Parker said. "May last a few weeks if he's nursed, that's all."

"Who's nursing him?" said I, putting down my knife and fork.

"The neighbors, sir," said she. "And the gal—and the boy. To hear them children talk, you'd think they was fifty. Ah, the poor things! Ah, the poor, brave, little things!" Her apron went to her eyes.

I got up from the table and began to walk up and down. "Mrs Parker," said I, "you get a four-wheeler to two and just you be off back to Hackney like the wind and get a trained nurse in and coals and blankets and grapes and jellies and things. Don't spare don't wait never mind about me. I'll manage."

"Ah, sir," said she, "you're a real-hearted gentleman, Mr Wilkie."

"Stuff and nonsense," said I. "Didn't he fight for his country?"

"Not much fight left in him now, sir," said she.

"You get a trained nurse in," I said. "And tell her, if she cures him and marries him, I'll give 'em the wedding breakfast."

"Ah, sir," said my housekeeper, "I'm thinking it'll be a funeral repast."

When the war broke out, and went wrong, I didn't volunteer. I should have been thought too old to go to the Front, but, apart from that, I didn't feel qualified. I know a man who said he could take cover first class, but couldn't shoot a haystack. My case is the reverse: I can shoot, but I'm stout and not nimble. I couldn't take cover—unless it was behind a haystack, indeed. So I didn't go to the war. I read about it, instead, at the Junior Squaretoes, and here I am, alive and well, happy though not a hero—a thing absurdly unfair. Because, here was Hezekiah Bill's father, who trained his children never to allow they were cryin', a man with plenty of pluck and patriotism, who did volunteer, did go to the Front and shoot, whether he could or no didn't take enough cover—came across somebody who could shoot better, for the other side, got wounded, came home (home!) found his wife had died meantime, found also that he had lost his job by being, patriotic, got no work, began to starve quietly, went out with the processions, for the sake of Alice Amelia and Hezekiah Bill caught the influenza developed pneumonia, could see death taking aim at him, and found no cover.

I am no politician, but I consider the whole thing disgusting. What do I pay income tax for? Why have we a War Office? Why is there a Patriotic Fund? What welcome and reward do we reserve for our Reservists?

I am a man decently careful over language, but I confess that when I had seen Alice Amelia's father, and Alice Amelia helping the trained nurse to wait on him, and Hezekiah Bill knuckling his tears back again, I had to go out on the landing: it was a three-pair back in a place called Bloomer's Rents—and say a few strong words. I couldn't help it.

"Why, you're crying, sir," sharp little Alice Amelia said, in a whisper, when I went in again.

"O you little fibber!" said I, "I'm laughing as hard as ever I can laugh!"

I had gone down to see the poor fellow, a silly thing for me to do—no affair of mine—don't know what they'd think of me at the Junior Squaretoes—but I went. When I'm started on a thing, I usually want to see it through. I drove down to Bloomer's Rents, in the most unfashionable part of Hackney, to see it through.

Mrs. Packer and I went down together in a four-wheeler, of course, and the cabby demanded double fare—said it was a cab, not a van.

I might have been at golf instead—I knew my figure and digestion would suffer—but I went to Hackney several times and at last I saw what I never saw before—I saw a man die. Hezekiah Bill's father, who had confronted Boer bullets, died of pneumonia in a three-pair back. He joined in a procession again—the long procession of the dead that flies away into the unknown, while the watchers stand and stare, this side the bourne.

So behold my plight—me a hard-hearted bachelor—a stony-fisted lawyer—a selfish clubman—a Junior Squaretoe—and two children on my hands! They are in my house now, very interesting they look in their black. Hezekiah Bill cries at night in bed, I believe, but never lets anyone see him do it. Alice Amelia has put her mother's bonnet and Rob Roy shawl away for when she goes out of mourning: and what I want to know is, is there anybody who wishes to adopt a boy of seven and a girl of eleven?

Two little bricks they are, and calculated to comfort any woman with a mother's heart who never was a mother. Who will adopt them? Be seconded by? I shall have to marry if you don't. They must have a continental mother. Could I love to marry the trained nurse, Mrs Packer, I expect. Oh, do!

PRAYER OF A HORSE

From Farm and Dairy.

By order of Acting Police Commissioner Bugher, who as First Deputy Commissioner has charge of the traffic squads, New York, there has been posted in every stable and other places, where police horses are kept a neatly printed card bearing this "Prayer of a Horse."

POLICE DEPARTMENT
NEW YORK

To thee, my master, I offer my prayer:

Feed me, water and care for me, and when the day's work is done provide me with shelter, a clean, dry bed and a stall wide enough for me to lie down in comfort. Talk to me. Your voice often means as much to me as the reins. Pet me sometimes that I may serve you the more gladly and learn to love you. Do not jerk the reins, and do not whip me when going up hill. Never strike, beat or kick me when I do not understand what you mean, but give me a chance to understand you. Watch me, and if I fail to do your bidding see if something is not wrong with my harness or feet.

Examine my teeth when I do not eat. I may have an ulcerated tooth and that, you know, is very painful. Do not tie my head in an unnatural position or take away my best defence against flies and mosquitoes by cutting off my tail.

And, finally, oh! my master, when my useful strength is gone do not turn me out to starve or freeze or sell me to some cruel owner, to be slowly tortured and starved to death. But do thou, my master, take my life in the kindest way and your God will reward you here and hereafter. You may not consider me irreverent if I ask this in the name of Him who was born in a stable. Amen.

DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION

From Farm and Dairy.

District dairy meetings under the auspices of the Dairymen's Association of Eastern Ontario will be held as indicated below. The Department of Agriculture is sending the Chief Instructor for Eastern Ontario, Mr. G. G. Publow, Kingston, or his assistant, Mr. J. F. Singleton, to each of these meetings, while the President of the Association, Mr. Henry Glen, M.P., will attend the whole series.

The dairymen in the localities concerned will have an opportunity of nominating a representative to the Board of Directors of the Association for the ensuing year at each of these meetings. Cheese-makers and producers as well as farmers should attend these meetings. The local instructor or instructors for the district concerned will give reports of the season's work, and such matters as are of special importance in the District relative to the manufacture of cheese will be discussed at each meeting.

SOMETHING ABOUT HENS

From Farm and Dairy.

"What a fine lot of hens you have here," exclaimed a lady on looking through the poultry plant at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. "I am sure you must get a lot of eggs."

"No, we are not getting any eggs at the present time," said Mr. A. G. Gilbert. "We cannot afford to have our hens laying now when eggs are 15 cents a dozen. We start them laying when eggs go up to 35 cents."

The lady went away in disgust. To her this was plainly a case of robbery; to produce eggs only when city people had to pay 35 to 40 cents a dozen. From the point of view of the farmer, however, who is not keeping hens for charity, but rather for the money there is in it, winter eggs the thing. With proper management it is just as easy to get winter eggs as summer eggs.

In the first place, it should be remembered that in the ovary of a pullet there are about 600 eggs. With proper management, 125 to 150 or even 200 eggs can be obtained from the pullet during its first year, and it will do almost as well the second year. From then on the quantity decreases rapidly each year. The folly of keeping hens when they are eight or nine years of age as many of us do is apparent. Such a hen will lay only a few eggs each spring. The first point, therefore, in producing winter eggs is to have either pullets or one year old hens.

The second point is in the housing. Hens cannot be expected to lay in the damp, ill-ventilated though warm houses, which were once the rule. The open-fronted or muslin-curtained poultry house which is always dry and well ventilated is the ideal place for producing winter eggs.

In feeding, the system which involves the least labor but keeps the hen busy is the one adopted by most of our successful poultry men. The wet mashes which were once so popular have been abandoned almost altogether. Dry mashes and whole grain mixed in the litter should be the rule. With young birds, well ventilated houses and a system of feeding, which keeps them busy, there is no trouble in obtaining winter eggs and lots of them.

ENGLAND WANTS THEM

Preaching the Gospel of GIN PILLS in the Old Country

Canada's wheat fields are not the only things that are making our country talked about. A well known citizen of North Toronto has set the people of England talking about GIN PILLS, the great Canadian kidney Cure. The old country has nothing like GIN PILLS and the missionary work done by Mr. and Mrs. Simpson is bearing fruit in the great demand which sufferers from Kidney Trouble are making for our own GIN PILLS.

DAVISVILLE, North Toronto.

"I have great pleasure in writing and recommending GIN PILLS. We have used them for the last two years and they have never failed us. We took GIN PILLS to the old country some time ago and gave some to relatives and friends and they have asked us to find out where they can buy GIN PILLS over there. Everyone was pleased with the pills and said that only two pills were needed to give relief. Will you let me know if you have any agents in England? I had a few pills left on my way back here and we gave them to a woman on board ship and she was much pleased with them. If I can be of any help to those suffering from Kidney Trouble in spreading this wonderful remedy GIN PILLS I am only too willing to offer my services." A. SIMPSON.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50. If your dealer does not have them, send direct to us. Remember—GIN PILLS are guaranteed to give relief, if—after taking them you are not fully satisfied, simply return the empty boxes to your druggist and your money will be promptly refunded. GIN PILLS are only mildly laxative. For Chronic Constipation, Bilious Attacks and Sick Headaches, something more active is required. A QUESTION

From Farm and Dairy.

I have no grain but lots of ensilage, roots and mixed hay. What mill stuffs would you advise me to buy to feed in combination with these feeds for dairy cows in full milk? L. H., Wentworth Co., Ont.

When all grain feeds have to be purchased the grains advisable will depend upon the market prices in your locality and on the kind of roughage that you are about to feed. Where a large part of the roughage will consist of ensilage and roots, a fairly high percentage of digestible protein in bought feeds is advisable as a sufficient quantity of carbonaceous material will be obtained from the roughage fed.

As a general rule protein can be purchased more cheaply in the form of more expensive feeds such as oil cake or cotton seed than in the less concentrated and cheaper feeding stuffs such as bran or oats. Heavy feeds such as oil cake meal, however, cannot be fed alone, they need to be lightened by other grains. For this purpose, wheat bran is unexcelled. For a cow giving 25 or 30 pounds of milk a day, a ration composed of 35 pounds of ensilage, 20 pounds of roots, 16 pounds of hay, five pounds of bran and two of cotton seed meal or oil cake, would be about right. The concentrated feeds most advisable to purchase will depend largely on current market prices.

THE GRASPING OF A STRAW

By Curtis Yorke
Author of "The Wild Ruthvens," etc.

"Three pounds, eleven shillings and fourpence halfpenny," she said monotonously for the third time. "And forbidden to do any writing for at least six months." Then she cried a little, because she was lonely, and ill, and poor, and had not a friend in the world.

A knock came to the door, and her landlady's daughter looked in.

"Mother thought you might like to look at the paper, miss," she said civilly.

Ann dried her eyes, and took it with a smiling word of thanks. A little later, as she ran her eye over the advertisement columns, her attention was caught by a paragraph containing her own initials. The paragraph ran thus:

"If A. L. be alive, will she communicate at once with E. D., Crane Court, Essex."

"A. L." Ann repeated aloud. "I don't suppose it stands for Ann Lessingham. But—"

A curious light came into her eyes, and she sat for a time in deep thought.

"I will!" she said at last, under her breath. Then she went to her writing-table, and dashed off a note.

"A. L. is alive," she wrote, in a carefully disguised hand and has just seen your advertisement. Send further particulars to her at above address, under care of Miss Lessingham."

This missive she posted herself, and awaited the result. By return of post she had the following reply, written in a small feminine hand that pleased her. It was addressed to Miss L'Estrange, care of Miss Lessingham.

"Dear Ann," it said. "It is so very fortunate you saw my advertisement. We did not know if you were alive or dead, having lost sight of you for so long. Will you come to us at the earliest possible moment after receiving this. Uncle James is dying, and as you know, all his money simply because you are the daughter of the woman he was once engaged to—goes to charities unless you marry my brother Roy. It seems too silly, but uncle is as obstinate as can be about it. So it rests with you to save Roy and me from becoming beggars. He is such a dear fellow you can't possibly object to marry him, though you did not get on very well together long ago. I enclose you his photograph that he may plead his own cause with you. He does not know I have advertised or written, and I shall not tell him until I hear from you that you will come.

Affectionately yours,
Nellie Douglas."

The photograph was that of a man seemingly well over thirty, with a strong dark face and very earnest eyes.

"Shall I? Shall I?" Ann whispered to the pictured face.

Then without giving herself further time to think, she consulted a time-table, and wired to her unknown correspondent that she would arrive at Crane Court that evening.

Her packing was brief, for her belongings were few. When she had settled with her landlady, she found she had only a few shillings over her railway fare. A reckless gaiety took possession of her.

"I am going to commit a fraud," she said to her image in the glass, as she tied on her veil. "But on the other hand I am going to save two people (besides myself) from poverty. So let the one condone the other, and the dead past bury its dead. Exit Ann Lessingham. Enter Ann L'Estrange."

A few hours later she found herself on the platform at Bellchurch, looking round anxiously to see if anyone had come to meet her. Then she saw Roy Douglas coming towards her. She knew him at once from his photograph.

He looked very stern, and raised his hat somewhat stiffly.

"Good evening," he said. "Miss L'Estrange, I presume? You have had a cold journey, I am afraid. Is this all your luggage?"

"Yes," Ann answered, wildly wishing herself back in Lance Street.

Mr. Douglas led the way to a brougham which was waiting, and a minute later Ann was bowling along the fast-darkening road with the stranger who was so soon to be her husband.

He was quite silent for a time, then he said coldly and somewhat hesitatingly,

"I understand, Miss L'Estrange, that—that you are willing to carry out the terms insisted on by my uncle that you are willing to to become my wife?"

Ann's face flamed. A sudden fear of what she was going to do caught at her heart, and made her feel sick. But she only said,

"Yes, I am willing."

After a pause he continued in a constrained voice,

"I feel that we are asking you to make a great sacrifice. I hope you understand that it is for Nellie's sake alone that I—that I—Oh, I feel as if I were abominably rude in speaking to you in this way, but—"

"I quite understand," said Ann calmly. "It is purely a business arrangement on both sides. Please say no more about it."

He was looking down at her critically. "You are very much changed," he said. "I should not have known you. But of course six years is a long time, and you were a mere child when we last met."

As he spoke the brougham turned into a deeply-gravelled avenue, and presently stopped at an open door whence a faint light emerged.

Douglas led Ann up a short flight of steps into a square, badly-lit hall, hung with faded tapestry. At one side rose a massive oak staircase leading to unseen gloom above. Down this staircase a slender girlish figure was coming slowly, carrying a small lamp in whose light her face seemed unnaturally thin and wasted.

"Ah! you have brought her, then," the girl exclaimed, as she set the lamp on a bracket, and ran down the remaining steps. "You dear Ann! I knew you would come, though Roy said you would not."

As she spoke she put her arms round Ann's neck, and kissed her affectionately.

"Come with me, dear," the girl added, "and take off your hat and coat. There is no time to lose, for uncle is getting rapidly weaker."

Ann followed her, and went through a swift toilet. When she came out of her room, she found Mr. Douglas and his sister waiting for her. She accompanied them along the corridor, and into a bedroom lit by two solitary candles. Two men stood beside the heavily curtained bed. One of them came forward hurriedly.

"Your uncle is becoming rapidly weaker," he said. "Perhaps the ceremony had better take place without delay."

"Ann, Ann," said a feeble voice from the bed. "You have come, then, at last."

"Will you speak to him," said Douglas.

Ann moved slowly across the room, and looked down into a tired lined old face already darkened by death's shadow.

"So you are little Ann," said the old man, with the wraith of a smile. "My dear love's daughter. You are going to marry my boy, are you not? Then I'll die happy—quite happy. But let them be quick, child—let them be quick. I'm going very fast."

Ann felt as though she were in some vague terrifying dream. A still vaguer dream followed, in which she and the stern man beside her promised to belong to each other until death should part them. The clergyman's voice seemed to fill the room. Then it ceased suddenly, and she heard the voice from the bed whisper faintly.

"Kiss her, Roy—kiss her... No, no—kiss her lips, like a man."

Roy Douglas bent and touched her lips with his. The contact thrilled her strangely, and a hot wave of color flooded her face from brow to neck.

"Will you sign your name," said someone. She took the pen, and tried to write. But the signature was hardly legible, save for the two initial letters.

The dying man was smiling. Ann saw them lift him up, and he feebly signed a document that she knew was his will. The doctor and the clergyman witnessed the signature.

"Now let thy servant," he muttered—"now let thy servant depart—depart—"

The voice died away. But the smile lingered, and grew fixed and stiff.

Nellie, weeping a little, took Ann in her arms and kissed her.

"You good Ann," she said. "God bless you, dear. I know Roy will never let you regret what you have done."

But Roy stood silent and forbidding, and Ann's heart sank within her. It was only now she realized what she had done.

* * * * * *

A fortnight had passed. Old James Douglas had been laid to rest in the family vault, and his nephew Roy reigned in his stead.

Ann and her husband met at meal-hours, seldom at any other times. She and Nellie were together constantly, and a strong affection had sprung up between them. During a week of cold, wet weather Nellie caught a severe cold, and as her lungs had always been delicate, the doctors feared serious mischief. Roy was terribly anxious, and hardly left his sister's room until all danger was over. Thus he and Ann saw each other hourly, for Nellie fretted if Ann were long out of her sight. The latter marvelled at the man who had seemed to her so stern and cold. His very voice, when he spoke to the sick girl, was full of adoring tenderness.

"How he could love!" Ann found herself thinking with a curious pang at her heart.

Even to her he was softened and gentle; and the germ of love that had slept in her heart since their strange wedding-day, stirred and grew into conscious life.

When Nellie was strong enough to be moved, she went to stay with an old schoolfellow near Exeter. Roy took her himself, and returned a day or two later. Thus he and his young wife were alone in the grim old house.

As the weeks went on Ann found her life lonely and monotonous enough. Roy rode, or tramped about with his gun, or shut himself up in his study. Ann took long walks either alone or accompanied by the dogs. She also got through an appreciable amount of society novels and fashionable fancy work. She had no friends, therefore she neither wrote nor received letters. And she found enforced idleness irksome.

They went out but little, for Roy said other people's entertainments bored him; and he did not feel called upon to be hospitable to his neighbors while his uncle's death was so recent.

Most of the surrounding families called, and Ann returned their visits alone, Roy uniformly declining to accompany her. Sometimes, in these solitary drives she wondered if she had not been really happier in her old poverty-stricken days. It was terrible to her to live under the same roof with her husband knowing that he cared nothing for her. Of her own feelings towards him she had no longer any doubt. She simply loved him with all her impulsive woman's heart.

"And would that have been so very terrible to you?" he said, touching her hair caressingly.

"Yes," she answered faintly.

He drew her nearer to him, and bent his head so that it almost touched hers.

"I have been a brute, at times, at late, I know," he said in a low voice. "But if you knew the reason, Ann, I think you would forgive me."

She moved away from him a little.

"Are you happy, Ann?" he continued after a silence. "Is it not dull for you—your quiet life in this grim old house, with a quasi-husband whom you do not love?"

"I am happier than I deserve to be," she answered with sudden bitterness.

"Ann," he said abruptly and without looking at her. "You do not care for me I know. But tell me, little Ann—you do not care for any other man?"

"No, Roy."

"Have you ever cared for any one?" he went on, speaking very low. Then, as she did not answer, he added almost roughly. "Of course I have no earthly right to ask you that. I beg your pardon."

And turning quickly away, he left her.

But a little later, when she went to the library to say good-night to him, to her intense surprise and confusion, he took her in his arms and kissed her forehead.

"We can at least be friends," he said in an odd voice.

Flushing deeply, she disengaged herself, and almost ran out of the room.

From that time a curious camaraderie sprang up between them. For each there was a queer fascination in their anomalous relations to each other. There was the mutual interest, too, of comparing opinions on subjects many and various, and the gradual drawing together of two minds that proved to have much in common.

Gradually Ann's guilty fears were lulled to rest. She had acted for the best, she argued with herself. And yet—as she came to know her husband's character better, she shivered at the thought of being found out. More than once she was on the point of confession, and then the waiting fear that it might mean exile from Roy for ever, tied her tongue anew.

Thus the sunny, peaceful time went on, and Nellie wrote that she would be home in a few days. Then Roy had planned that the two were to go abroad for the summer.

One evening Ann went into the study, and found her husband with an open letter in his hand. His face wore a look of puzzled annoyance.

"Come in, Ann," he said absent irritably, as she paused at the door.

She obeyed, a nameless fear clutching at her heart.

"The most extraordinary thing, Roy went on. "I have just received a letter from a woman who signs herself Ann L'Estrange. She says she knew Nellie and myself years ago, and that her mother and my Uncle James were old friends and at one time engaged to be married. She is staying at Brereton for a few days, and wants me to go over to see her—"

Ann interrupted him with a wild scream of laughter. Then she said hysterically,

"And if she is Ann L'Estrange, who—who am I?"

"My dear girl," he answered impatiently. "You surely don't suppose for a moment that I imagine—Good God, Ann, are you ill? You look like death."

The girl's lips parted, but no sound came from them. As she looked at the face that had become so dear to her, a sudden loathing of her own deceit overwhelmed her. She sat down—simply because she could not stand—and said in a labored far-away voice,

"And suppose that she insists that she—is the real Ann L'Estrange, and that I—am an imposter. What then?"

"What is the matter with you, Ann?" he said, taking her hand and drawing her towards him. "Do you suppose," he added gravely, "that I have known you all this time without finding out that you are as transparent and truthful as a little child? I would take your word against all the world."

She hid her face on his arm.

"Oh, Roy, Roy," she moaned, "my heart will break." He bent over her in tender concern.

"Ann—my little Ann," he whispered gently, as he laid his arm round her shoulders. "You surely don't think that anyone could shake my trust in you? What a foolish child you are! This woman is evidently an impostor, an arrant blackmailer. Put her out of your mind as I shall."

Ann's breath came quickly.

"I am glad you trust me," she breathed. "I am glad."

"Trust you!" he said unsteadily. "Trust you!" He drew her nearer nearer, until his lips met hers. She remained quite still, and a weird silence seemed to throb through the room. Then she pushed away his encircling arms and stood up.

"God help me. I can't do it," she said hoarsely. "I can't deceive you any longer. What she says is quite true."

Roy looked at her in amazement.

"Listen," she went on desperately. "My name is Ann Lessingham. I have no friends in all the world. My father and mother and all belonging to me are dead. Before I came here I made my living by writing articles in magazines. And then I fell ill, and was ordered to give up work for at least six months. I had hardly any money, and there seemed nothing before me but the workhouse or suicide. I chanced to see Nellie's advertisement. And the devil tempted me and I fell."

She paused, and again a death-like silence filled the room.

"Do what you like with me!" she went on in a long, sobbing cry. "Send me away. Curse me. It is all over all over."

Roy's face had grown as white as her own. He did not speak. He only sat down, and covered his face with his hands.

Ann stole away to her room, and locked herself in.

Her maid came to her door once or twice, but she sent her away. Roy made no sign.

The night passed and the early summer dawn crept in, and still Ann lay face downwards on her bed, realizing bitterly how hard is the way of transgressors.

At last she rose, and flung open her window, saying a silent farewell to the place she had learned to love as home.

"Ah, well," she thought, as she gazed with dry eyes at the fair gardens and lawns and woods. "I have had my day. And now the end has come. It is bitter. For I think he was beginning to care for me. I shall have the memory of his kiss." Then she broke down and cried until she could cry no more."

When she went downstairs, she learned that Roy had already breakfasted and ridden over to Brereton. She swallowed a cup of coffee and went out into the gardens.

But a heavy shower drove her indoors, and she shut herself up in her morning-room, where she wrote a short letter to her husband.

"When you receive this," it ran, "I shall have put myself out of this world where there seems no room for me. I have learned to love you with all my heart, my husband, and I cannot bear to live, knowing how you must despise me for my deceit and wickedness. You did not know I loved you, did you, dear? You never should have known, only I am going away from you for ever.

Your miserable
Ann."

This she placed on the writing-table in Roy's study. Then she went up to her bedroom, and locked the door. She had in her wardrobe a bottle of laudanum that she had bought weeks ago for toothache. She shivered a little as she took out the bottle and examined the thick brown liquid it held. She was going bravely to die, and it seemed hard to go out into the unknown darkness. She had a dim idea that she ought to say some kind of prayer, and she flung herself on her knees by the bedside. Heavy sobs shook her, but no words would come.

A sharp knock came to the door, and someone turned the handle.

"Ann!" said her husband's voice sternly. "Open the door!"

Ann held her breath. She rose stealthily from her knees, and went over to the dressing-table, where she hastily poured the whole contents of the laudanum bottle into a tumbler. As she was about to raise it to her lips, she heard a key click swiftly in a door at the other end of the room, and turning with a smothered cry, she saw that Roy had entered. A second later he had unceremoniously emptied the contents of the tumbler into a wash-hand basin.

"Do you think you will improve matters by making a melodramatic little fool of yourself, Ann?" he said in a voice that shook slightly.

She covered her face with her hands.

"So you were going to leave me, my little Ann," he said, looking down at her, and speaking almost in a whisper. "And yet you say you love me."

"Oh, it is not true!" she cried incoherently. "I do—I love you. I do not. Oh why didn't you let me die? It would have been all over by now."

He smoothed back gently a wisp of hair that had fallen over her forehead, then took her in his arms and deliberately kissed her twice.

"I could not let you see my foolish little Ann to—because I could not do without you, Roy. It is not possible that you are going to forgive me?"

"I am sorry to have to say," he said slowly, "that I do not. One is, that I hate a liar, and you have since the day I married you. The other reason is that I love you. I rode over to Brereton, and made the acquaintance of the real Ann L'Estrange. She is a pretty girl, and course of skin and feature, and I should think she must weigh about fifteen stone. Thank Heaven she does not belong to me."

"So you see I haven't gained your uncle's money for you and Nellie after all," she said presently.

"My dear Ann," he said, looking amused. "The point with my uncle was that I should marry Ann L'Estrange. As far as the name concerned, I did marry Ann L'Estrange, so I've saved the will—and me has been."

"Roy," she cried, "after a brief happy silence," and—and do trust me again? I have been so very miserable."

"Sweetheart," he said, "we will suppose that all your capabilities of deceit have been exhausted during the last three months. Therefore you shall have a clean slate for the future."

EXAMINER READERS'

Attention Drawn to Short Stories Appearing in To-day's Issue

The attention of the readers of the Examiner is drawn to two short stories on pages five and six of to-day's issue. The Examiner has arranged for appearance from mtime to time of several of these stories which will be completed in one issue. The two stories in to-day's paper are entitled, "In the Procession," by J. H. Zoxall, and, "The Grasping of a Straw," by Curtis Yorke.

THE WEATHER

Judging from appearance this morning it looked as if winter had set in, but a few more weeks of fine weather are due us yet. The rain yesterday was exceptionally heavy, totalling 1 inch and 38-100. The first snowfall last year was on Oct 30th; a little fell on Nov 22nd, but it was not until Dec 6th that the ground received its mantle of white. Good sleighing began Dec. 16th and continued, without interruption, until March 7th. It was about a year ago (on Nov. 22) that a disastrous freezing rain occurred, which seriously damaged many of the shade and other trees, through its accumulating and breaking of branches.—W. P.

TO-MORROW IS TAG DAY; NO CHANCE TO ESCAPE

To-morrow is Tag Day. Here is your chance to help the work of the Children's Aid Society.

There is no use trying to dodge the tag girls to-morrow. There will be one hundred and fifty of them and you are bound to be caught. Your only protection is a tag, so if you want to be safe, better buy early.

The man that wants to be considered a sport to-morrow will be the one that keeps on buying tags and hides them.
